Number reprinted since (to February, 1919) 14,000 copies.
There is probably no African language so widely known as the Swahili. It is understood along the coasts of Madagascar and Arabia, it is spoken by the Seedees in India, and is the trade language of a very large part of Central or Intertropical Africa. Zanzibar traders penetrate sometimes even to the western side of the continent, and they are in the constant habit of traversing more than half of it with their supplies of Indian and European goods. Throughout this immense district any one really familiar with the Swahili language will generally be able to find some one who can understand him, and serve as an interpreter.

This consideration makes it a point of the greatest importance to our Central African Mission that Swahili should be thoroughly examined and well learnt. For if the members of the Mission can go forth from Zanzibar, or, still better, can leave England already well acquainted with this language, and provided with books and translations adapted to their wants, they will carry with them a key that can unlock the secrets of an immense variety of strange dialects, whose very names are as yet unknown to us. For they will not
I had begun to print the conjugation of the verb, I was unable to continue my visits, and completed the "Collections" from Dr. Krapf, with the help of the vocabulary collected by the late Baron von der Decken and Dr. Kersten, and of that collected by the Rev. Thomas Wakefield of the United Methodist Free Churches' Mission, both of which I was kindly allowed to copy.

After Mohammed's partial recovery I continued my visits to him, and went through the verbs, making first a list of useful English verbs from a dictionary, and entering all the words contained in the collections of which I had copies. I thus checked and supplemented what others had already done, and obtained a tolerably complete insight into that branch of the vocabulary. Before I could get much beyond this, Mohammed was so far recovered as to be able to sail for Bombay. I have always much pleasure in acknowledging how much I owe to him.

Meanwhile I had begun my collection of short tales in Swahili, the first of which were printed in Zanzibar with an interlinear version, under the title of "Specimens of Swahili," in March 1866, and reprinted in an early number of "Mission Life." I also began to use my Swahili to a practical purpose by making the collections for a handbook of the Shambala language, the first draft of which was completed in May 1866. These collections were made with a view to the mission since commenced in that country by the Rev. C. A. Alington; they were revised by the help of another teacher, and printed in Zanzibar in the year 1867.
Finding the Swahili tales most valuable as well to myself as to those who were studying with me, I proceeded to print a further collection, with the title "Hadiithi za Kiunguja," in Swahili only. For the tales then printed I was mainly indebted to Hamis wa Kayi, a very intelligent young Swahili, who always comprehended better what a foreigner wanted to know, and explained more clearly what was difficult, than any one else I met with while in Zanzibar.

At the same period I had begun and carried on from time to time the investigation of the Yao or Achowa language, one peculiarly interesting to us, as that of nearly all the released slaves under Bishop Mackenzie’s charge, and as having now supplanted the Mang’anja in the country where our Mission was originally settled. From this study I first gained a definite notion of the wonderful effect the letter a has in African languages, and so came to understand the origin of several apparent irregularities in Swahili.

I had begun even before Mohammed bin Khamis left Zanzibar to make some essays in translation, the best of which are embodied in a pamphlet printed in Zanzibar, with the title "Translations in Swahili:" it was completed in January 1867.

I was then getting help from many quarters, and on explaining to some of our native friends our wish to make a complete translation of the Bible into their language, one of them, Sheikh 'Abd al 'Aziz, kindly volunteered to translate for me the Arabic Psalter into the best and purest Swahili. I found, before long, that not only did his numerous avocations prevent any rapid progress, but that his language was too learned to suit exactly our purpose in making the version; it did not therefore proceed further than the Sixteenth Psalm. I printed these as at once a memorial of his kindness and a specimen of what one of the most learned men in Zanzibar considers the most classical form of his language.

I cannot but mention at the same time the name of Sheikh Mohammed bin Ali, a man of the greatest research, to whose kindness I was indebted for a copy, made by his own hand, of some very famous Swahili poetry, with an interlinear Arabic version; he also revised for me a paraphrase of it in modern language, for which I was chiefly indebted (as for much other help) to Hassan bin Yusuf, whose interest in our doctrines and teachings has always been most marked. The verses and translation are both printed in the "Swahili Tales."

At the end of 1867 I printed a translation of Bishop Forbes' little primary catechism, chosen as being the shortest and clearest I could find to begin upon. Though very imperfect, I am glad to think that it has been found of use.

When I had completed the Yao collections, I went on to the Nyamwezi language, as being that of the largest and most central tribe with which there is constant and tolerably safe communication.

In November 1867 I lost, by the sadly sudden deaths of the Rev. G. E. Drayton and his wife, most useful helpers, who were beginning to be able to give me substantial assistance. Their places were, however, well supplied by the Rev. W. and Mrs. Lea, who arrived opportunely just before the time of our bereavement. I was then engaged in preparing the translations of St. Matthew's Gospel and of the Psalms, as well as in beginning to put in order the materials for the present work. To Mr. Lea I was indebted, amongst other things, for the first version of the 119th Psalm, and to Mrs. Lea for the arrangement of the Swahili-English Vocabulary. The last thing I printed in Zanzibar was a translation of the Easter and Advent Hymns, and of Adeste Fideles, which I had the pleasure of hearing the girls of the Mission Orphanage sing most sweetly to the old tunes just before I left.

I ought also to mention that, having been often under great obligations to the French Romanist Mission, I had the pleasure of printing for them a Catechism in French and Swahili, which was indirectly valuable to me as showing how the great truths we have in common were rendered by a perfectly independent student of the language. I know not how sufficiently to regret that the excellent compiler, Père Etienne Baur, should have been content to use the jargon (for it is nothing better) commonly employed by Indians and Europeans, and should have adopted an orthography adapted only to a French pronunciation.

Only three weeks before leaving I had the advantage of consulting two large manuscript dictionaries compiled by Dr. Krapf, and brought to Zanzibar by the Rev. R. L. Pennell. I was able to examine about half the Swahili-English volume, with the assistance of Hamis wa Kayi, enough to enrich materially my previous collections, and to show how far even now I fall short of my first predecessor in the work of examining and elucidating the languages of Eastern Africa. There remains for some future time or other hand the examination of the rest of Dr. Krapf's dictionary, as well as the collation of what will no doubt deserve to be the standard Swahili lexicon, on which the Rev. John Rebmann has been for nearly a quarter of a century labouring unweariedly. Even then there will remain many dialectic variations, and many old and poetical words and inflections, so that for many years one who loves such studies might find employment in this one language.

Since my arrival in England, at the end of November 1868, I have been able to superintend the printing of the Gospel of St. Matthew in Swahili, liberally undertaken by the Bible Society, of translations of the Church Catechism and of their Scriptural Reading Lessons out of the Old Testament, kindly undertaken by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. For the Central African Mission I have carried through the press this work and the collection of Swahili Stories with an English version, published by Messrs. Bell and Sons, of which those previously printed at Zanzibar form a small part, and besides these a number of small pamphlets, including translations of the Books of Ruth and Jonah, and some slight specimens of the Gindo, Zaramo, and Ngazidja languages. There remain the Psalms, which the Bible Society has promised to print for us, and the collections in the Yao and Nyamwezi languages, all which I should like to get through the press in the course of this year. I wish there were a chance of the Rev. John Rebmann's Swahili version of St. Luke's Gospel, of which I have seen a large part, being printed at the same time.

This handbook is arranged on the principle of supplying with each portion of it such rules as are required for the practical use of that portion. In the first part, after some introductory observations, Substantives, Adjectives, Pronouns, and Verbs have each a separate section, containing first the rules which govern their inflection and employment, and then an alphabetical list of the Swahili equivalents of our English words belonging to each part of speech. For the mere finding of words one general alphabet would perhaps have been more convenient; but as the object of this work is not merely to tell what the Swahili words are, but also how to employ them correctly, it seems better so to group them as to bring the rules of grammar and the words which they control into as close a connection with one another as possible. The Editor has done what most readers would have had to do—sort out first the word and then the grammatical rules which must be observed in using it. The minor parts of speech are indexed together to avoid a multiplicity of alphabets, except the Interjections, which cannot be said to have exact equivalents in any other language. The part ends with a section on the formation of words, which may be of use where the other alphabets fail to give a satisfactory rendering, and may also be useful as a guide in turning Swahili into English, in the case of the many words which ignorance or some oversight in preparing the second part may have caused to be omitted. The rules and hints prefixed to the second part are intended to enable any one who sees or hears a Swahili word to ascertain the material part of it, so as to be able to use the dictionary which follows. It is evident that there must be great difficulties at first in either using or arranging an alphabetical list of words which may begin with, in some cases, nine or ten different letters, according to the grammatical position they hold in each case. However, the difficulty is greater in appearance than in practice.

The Appendices contain some curious or useful matter which could not well find a place in the body of the work. The first contains a specimen of a curious kind of enigmatical way of writing and speaking called Kinyume. The second gives a specimen of the forms used in letter-writing, both in prose and verse. The third is part of a Swahili tale, with all the prefixes separated and the grammatical forms explained, intended as a guide and introduction to the art of reading, and through that of writing the language. The fourth Appendix consists of a small collection of phrases, some of them such as are wanted in ordinary conversation, some of them useful in illustrating the idiom or peculiar constructions used by natives. This collection might have been very much increased had it not been carefully confined to phrases actually met with in conversation with persons reputed to speak correctly.
The name of the language—Swahili—is beyond all doubt a modified form of the Arabic Sawáhil, the plural of Sahil, a coast. The natives themselves jestingly derive it from Sawa hila, which a Zanzibar interpreter would explain as "All same cheat."

ADVERTISEMENT TO SECOND EDITION.

The First Edition having been at the last sold out with unexpected rapidity, I have not been able to add so much as I should have wished to this. The chief novelty is the omission of what I called the second class of Substantives, which proved to be only the most common instance of the general rule, that Substantives of any and every form denoting animate beings are constructed with Adjectives and Pronouns in the forms proper to the first class. Some words have been added to the Vocabularies and a few mistakes corrected.

During the last four years the work of translation and collection has been going steadily forward, Swahili preaching has been going on, and some Elementary School-books printed in Zanzibar for our vernacular schools. The great work of evangelizing Africa seems to grow in magnitude the more one understands what is required for it; but our hopes still grow with the growth of our knowledge.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THIRD EDITION.

This Edition may be taken to represent substantially the final form which the Handbook assumed in the hands of its compiler, the late Bishop Steere. No estimate can be attempted here of his services to philology in general, and the student of African languages in particular, still less of their bearing on the spread of Christianity in Central Africa. Whatever the relative purity of the dialects of Mombasa and Zanzibar, and however great the debt Bishop Steere undoubtedly owed to his distinguished predecessor in their study, Dr. Krapf, the broad fact remains that Bishop Steere took the language as he found it spoken in the capital city of the East Coast, reduced its rules to so lucid and popular a form as not only to make it accessible, but easy to all students, and finally made a great advance towards stereotyping its forms and extending its use by embodying it in copious writings and translations.

Some of the last hours of his life were apparently spent in preparing this Handbook for a new edition. Those who were familiar with the many cares and anxieties then pressing on him, will not be surprised that there were signs of haste and pressure in his revision. With Part I., however, he seems to have been satisfied. The corrections of the text were few and unimportant, and though the Lists of Words might have been largely added to, he seems to have preferred leaving them as they were, in view of the strictly practical purpose of the whole book.

With Part II. (the Swahili-English Vocabulary, &c.) the case is rather different. With the aid of various members of the Mission, the Bishop had made somewhat large collections in order to expand and complete it. Probably from the pressure of work before alluded to, he had only prepared a selection of them for this Edition. It has been thought better, however, to incorporate all the words found in his notes and added with his approval. But it must be remembered that the Bishop never regarded Part II. as ranking as a Dictionary, even in embryo, but rather as a tolerably full list of words to serve as a useful companion to Part I. Even with this reservation, there remain many traces of imperfection in arrangement, spelling, and interpretation of words, which would doubtless have been removed if he had been allowed time to pass the whole list under revision finally.

This final revision no one is in a position adequately to supply. Minor corrections and additions have been cautiously and sparingly made. One Appendix (No. V.), likely to subserve the practical aim of the whole, has been added, with the Ven. Archdeacon Hodgson's approval. There still remain among the Bishop's notes some miscellaneous specimens of Swahili verses, proverbs, riddles, &c., which might have formed another.
It is thought best, however, to reserve them, and leave the whole book, as far as possible, as the Bishop left it. Subsequent editors may find something to add. They probably will not find much to alter.

A. C. M.

P.S.—Dr. Krapf's great Dictionary of the Swahili Language, in its printed form, was in the Bishop's hands too short a time to allow of his making any use of it for this Edition of the Handbook.

SWAHILI HANDBOOK.

PART I.

The Swahili language is spoken by the mixed race of Arabs and Negroes who inhabit the Eastern Coast of Africa, especially in that part which lies between Lamoo and the neighbouring towns on the north, and Cape Delgado on the south.

It is classified by Dr. Bleek as one of the Zangian genus of the middle branch of the Bantu languages. That is to say, it belongs to one of the subdivisions of that great family of Negro languages, which carries on the work of grammatical inflexion by means of changes at the beginning of the word, similar to that whereby in Kafir, umuntu, a man, becomes in the plural abantu, people. All these languages divide their nouns into a number of classes, which are distinguished by their first syllable, and bring their adjectives, pronouns, and verbs into relation with substantives by the use of corresponding changes in their first syllables. None of these classes denote sex in any way. Dr. Bleek, in his comparative grammar of South African languages, enumerates eighteen prefixes which are found in one or other of the languages of this family; but it must be remembered that he reckons by the form of the prefix only, so that the singular and plural forms of most words count as two, while the same form will sometimes answer to two or more forms in the other number. Dr. Bleek's arrangement is the most convenient for his purpose, which is the comparison of the formatives used in different languages; but I have not followed it in this work, because I think that for practical purposes such a classification should be used as will enable the learner who sees or hears the noun in the singular at once to put it into the plural. Prefixes may be counted up separately; but in practice we have to do with nouns, not with prefixes, and a noun cannot be put into a different class when it becomes plural or singular without great risk of confusion. Thus in Frédoux' Sechuana grammar, 4 and 6 are the plurals of 3, 10 and 6 are the plurals of 11, and 6 alone is the plural of 5 and 14. Can this be a clear arrangement?

I have very little doubt that Dr. Bleek is right in regarding these classes as substantially the same with the genders in most of the European languages, which are even now only sex-denoting to a very limited extent. There is a distinction in Swahili as to words which denote living beings, called by Dr. Krapf, not very happily, a masculine gender, though it has no relation to sex, but to life only.

It is very puzzling to a beginner, accustomed to languages which change at the end, to find the beginnings of words so very uncertain. Thus he hears that ngema means good; but when he begins to apply his knowledge he finds that natives use for the English word good, not only ngema, but mwema, wema, mema, njema, jema, pema, chema, vyema, and kwema. Again, yangu means my, but he will hear also, wangu, zangu, changu, vyangu, langu, pangu, kwangu, and mwangu. It is necessary therefore to get at the very first a firm hold of the fact that in Swahili it is the end, and not the beginning of a word, which is its substantial and unchanging part. The beginning of the word when taken to pieces denotes its number, time, and agreements.

The “Table of Concords” prefixed to the section on Adjectives, shows at one view the variables of the language; and when that has been mastered, the difficulties for an English student will be over. The various forms will be explained, and the nicer distinctions mentioned in the grammatical parts of the book. In the preliminary observations prefixed to the second part will be found an account of all the changes which may occur at the end of a word, changes which in practice are very soon mastered, relating as they chiefly do to a few points in the conjugation of the verb.

There is a broken kind of Swahili in use among foreigners, Indian as well as European, which serves for very many purposes, though it is of course utterly useless when one has to speak with exactness, or on subjects not immediately connected with the ordinary affairs of life and commerce. Its rules may be briefly laid down as follows:—If you are in doubt about how to make a plural, prefix ma, or use nyangi, i.e. many. In conjugating the verb, always put the subject before and the object after it, for the present tense prefix na-, for the past ma-, for the future ta-. For no or not, use hakuna. It is wonderful how intelligible you can make yourself by these few rules; but it is just as wonderful what absurd broken stuff can be made to do duty for English.

Let any one, however, who really wishes to speak the language get the Table of Concord well into his head, by any means he finds best for the purpose, and he will have no need to resort to broken and incorrect ways of talking.

Swahili, like all languages of the same family, is very rich in Verbs, and poor in Adjectives and Prepositions. There is nothing corresponding to the English Article, the word when standing alone implying the indefinite article, while the definite article can in many cases be expressed by the use and arrangement of the Pronouns, but still must often be left unexpressed. Though the Verb is etymologically the most important part of speech, it is the Substantive which determines the form of all the variable syllables. The Substantive will therefore be first considered, and next the Adjective, which very closely resembles it. The Pronouns will come next, as it is by their help that the Verb is conjugated, then the Verb itself, and after that the minor parts of speech, Adverbs, Prepositions, Conjunctions, and, last of all, the Interjections. A sketch of the grammar of each part of speech, which aims at being sufficient for ordinary and practical purposes, is first given, and after that a list of words belonging to that part of speech, thus forming a combined grammar and English-Swahili dictionary. The second part consists of a Swahili-English vocabulary, and so completes the work.
INTRODUCTION.

The Swahili language has been hitherto but little written by those who speak it, and they know and use only the purely Arabic alphabet. There are copies of religious and secular verses, and possibly other works, composed in the old or poetical dialect, which is not now, and I believe never was, thoroughly understood by the mass of the people. The modern dialect is used in letters; but they have always a string of Arabic compliments at the beginning, and Arabic words and phrases freely interspersed throughout.

Any one who tries to read a letter or a poem written in Arabic characters, will at once see why it is impossible to adopt them as the standard Swahili alphabet. It is absolutely necessary to have a good idea of what you are to read before you can read at all. The reason is that Swahili has five vowels; Arabic only three, and of Swahili consonants the Arabic supplies no means of writing \(ch\), \(g\), \(p\), or \(v\), nor can consecutive consonants be written without shocking Arabic notions of propriety. Thus the Swahili are driven to write the \(ba\) for \(p\) and for \(mb\) as well as for \(b\); the \(ghain\) for \(g\), \(ng\), and \(ng'\), as well as for \(gh\); the \(fa\) for \(v\) and \(mv\), as well as for \(f\); the \(ya\) for \(ny\) as well as for \(y\); the \(shin\) for \(ch\) as well as for \(sh\); and to omit altogether the \(n\) before \(d\), \(j\), \(y\), and \(z\). Initial vowels and consecutive vowels are only to be expressed by hemzas or 'ains. In the first piece of written Swahili I ever possessed (the Story of the Ox and the Ass) the words ng'ombe and panda were written ghube and buda. It will be easily seen how imperfect and ambiguous a means of writing Swahili the Arabic character must be. An instance occurred while I was in Zanzibar of a letter written from Kilwa with the account of a fight, in which it was said that one of the principal men, amekufa, had died, or amevuka, had got away, and which it was no one could certainly tell; the last two consonants were fa and qaf, with three dots over them. If two of the dots belonged to the first letter, the man was dead; if two belonged to the next letter, he was alive: but the dots were so equally placed that no one could tell how to divide them. If the Arabic had possessed a v, there could have been no mistake. It would no doubt be possible to express Swahili sounds by using letters with additional dots and affixing arbitrary sounds to the letters of prolongation, as is done in Persian and Hindi, but the result would puzzle a genuine Swahili and could never be quite satisfactory in any respect.

There seems to be no difficulty in writing Swahili in Roman characters, there being no sound which does not so nearly occur in some European language that the proper way of writing it can readily be fixed upon, and illustrated by an example. When this is the case there is no need to look for anything further. I think those who try to settle the alphabets of new languages are too apt to forget how essential simplicity is to a really good alphabet. If the Roman alphabet can be made to distinguish all the sounds used in that language, it does all for it that it does for any. To attempt to distinguish the sounds used in that language, from the sounds used in another, or to mark all the varieties of tone which occur in speaking, is always useless and embarrassing, and not one man in a thousand has sufficient accuracy of ear to do it properly. It is practically easier to learn to attach a new sound to a known letter, than to learn a new sound and a new letter too, especially when the new letter has to be printed and written, and the learner is entangled in a maze of italics and letters with a point below and a point above, or a line through them, or some Greek letter which has not the sound one gives it in Greek, or some new invention which will fit well neither into printing nor writing, and looks at its ease neither as a capital nor a small letter. It generally happens that the sounds of a language, though not identical with those of another, correspond with them sufficiently to make the corresponding letters appropriate symbols. Thus an English and a French t are not identical; but which nation would or ought to submit always to put a dot somewhere about its t to show that it is not the t which it never will want to use, and never did, and could not pronounce, if it met with it? Or, to take a stronger instance, ought Germans, Englishmen, and Spaniards always to cross the tails of their j's, or print them in italics, or deform their books with new symbols, merely because they do not pronounce their j's as Frenchmen do theirs?
THE ALPHABET.

The Vowels are to be pronounced as in Italian, the Consonants as in English.

A = a in father.
B = b in bare.
Ch = ch in cherry. Italian c before i or e.
D = d in do. D occurs very frequently in the Mombas dialect where j is used in that of Zanzibar.
E = ai in chair.
F = f in fine. German v.
G = g in gate, never soft as in genius.
H = h in hat.
I = ee in feet.
J = j in joy. Sometimes more like dy or di in cordial. French di, German dj, Italian gi.
K = k in kalender.
L = l in long. L and r are generally treated as the same letter.
M = m in man.
N = n in no.
O = o in boy, more like au than the common English o.
P = p in paint.
R = r in raise. An English, not a Scotch, Irish, German, or French r. See L.
S = s in sun. German ss. It is never pronounced like a z or the English s in arise. S and sh are commonly used for one another indiscriminately.
T = t in ten. T frequently occurs in the dialect of Mombas where ch is used in that of Zanzibar.
THE ALPHABET.

\[ U = oo \text{ in tool.} \]
\[ V = v \text{ in very. German } v. \]
\[ W = w \text{ in win. French } ou. \text{ It is merely a } u \text{ pronounced as a consonant.} \]
\[ Y = y \text{ in yonder. German } j. \text{ It is merely an } i \text{ pronounced as a consonant. } Y \text{ is frequently used in the Lamoo dialect where } j \text{ occurs in that of Zanzibar.} \]
\[ Z = z \text{ in zany. German } s. Z \text{ frequently occurs in the dialect of Lamoo where } v \text{ is used in that of Zanzibar.} \]

There are several sounds introduced from the Arabic which do not occur in purely African words.

\[ \text{Gh = the Arabic } ghain; \text{ it is a guttural } g, \text{ resembling the Dutch } g. \text{ It may be obtained by pronouncing a } g \text{ (as nearly as it can be done) with the mouth wide open. Most Europeans imagine, the first time they hear it, that there is an } r \text{ sound after the } g, \text{ but this is a mistake.} \]
\[ \text{Kh = the Arabic } kha; \text{ it is a very rough form of the German } ch, \text{ the Spanish } j, \text{ or the Scotch } ch \text{ in } loch. \text{ It resembles the sound made in trying to raise something in the throat. It may always be replaced in Swahili by a simple } h, \text{ but never by a } k. \]
\[ \text{Th = the four Arabic letters } tha, thal, thod, \text{ and } thah. \text{ The first of these is the English } th \text{ in } think, \text{ the second that in } they. \text{ The third and fourth are thicker varieties of the second sound. In Swahili they may all be replaced by a } z. \text{ No attempt is ever made to distinguish the last three letters; but as the first is generally} \] marked in pronunciation, it is in the first part of this handbook marked by printing the \textit{th} in italics wherever it is to be pronounced as in the English word \textit{think}. The sound of the English \textit{th} in \textit{that} occurs in some Swahili as a dialectic variation for \textit{z}. In vulgar Swahili \textit{z} is not merely put for the Arabic \textit{th}, but \textit{th} is also put for the Arabic \textit{z}, as \textit{wathiri} for \textit{waziri}, a vizir.

There are several compound consonantal sounds which require notice.

\textbf{Ch}, a very common sound, representing what is sometimes a \textit{t} and sometimes \textit{ki}—in other dialects. \textit{C} is not required for any other sound, as it can be always represented by \textit{k} when hard, and by \textit{s} when soft. It would probably be an improvement always to write the \textit{ch} sound by a simple \textit{c}.

\textbf{Gn}, see \textit{ng}'.

\textbf{Kw} represents the sound of \textit{qu} in \textit{queer}.

\textbf{M} frequently stands for \textit{mu}, in which cases it is pronounced with a half-suppressed \textit{u} sound before it, and is even capable of bearing the accent of the word, as in \textit{mtu}, a person, where the stress of voice is on the \textit{m}, which has a dull nasal semivowel sound, not quite \textit{um}. Where \textit{m} occurs before any consonant except \textit{b} or \textit{w}, it must have this semivowel sound.
M, standing for mu, has generally its semi-vowel sound before u. Before a or e it becomes mw, and before o it frequently loses the u altogether, and is pronounced as a simple m.

N has frequently a nasal semivowel sound, a half-suppressed i being suggested by it. N has always this semivowel sound where it is immediately followed by ch, f, h, m, n, or s.

Ny has the sound of the Spanish ñ, the French and Italian gn, the Portuguese nh, and the English ni in companion, only a little thicker and more nasal.

Ng' is a peculiar African sound, much resembling the -ng which occurs at the end of many English words. If we could divide longing thus, lo-ning, without at all altering the pronunciation, it would come very near the African sound, which is never a final, because all Swahili syllables must end in a vowel. Some prefer to write this sound gn-, as it resembles the sound given by Germans and others to those letters when they occur as initial letters in Greek. This sound must be distinguished from the common sound of ng-, in which the g distinctly passes on to the following vowel, as in the English word engage; in ng'- both sounds are heard, but neither passes on to the vowel.

Sh is the Arabic shin, the English sh, the French ch, the German sch. Sh and s are commonly treated as identical.

P, T, K, and possibly some other letters, have occasionally an explosive or aspirated sound, such as an Irishman will often give them. This explosive sound makes no change in the letter, but is an addition to it, probably always marking a suppressed n. Thus upepo is a wind, with both p's smooth as in English; but the plural, which should regularly be upepo, is p'epo, with a strong explosive sound attached to the first letter. This explosive sound may be marked by an apostrophe; it is, however, very seldom necessary to the sense of a word, and is noticeably smoothed down or omitted by the more refined and Arabized Swahili.

There are other niceties of pronunciation which a fine ear may distinguish; but as they are by no means essential, and are seldom noticed by the natives themselves, it is not worth while here to examine them particularly.

As a rule, the vowels are all pronounced distinctly, and do not form diphthongs. When, however, a formative particle ending in -a is placed before a word beginning with e- or i-, the two letters coalesce into a long e sound. It is not, however, even in such a case as this, always incorrect to pronounce the two vowels distinctly, though it is not usually done. The instances of and rules for this union of sound will be found where the several prefixes which give occasion to it are dealt with.

When two vowels come together at the end of a word, they are often to the ear one syllable, and have the sound of a diphthong; they are really, however, two syllables of which the former bears the accent. This is at once apparent in the Merima dialect, in which an ɪ is put between the vowels. Thus kufaa, to be of use, which sounds as if written kufá, is in the Merima dialect kufala. The shifting of the accent sometimes shows that the vowels are really separate. Thus a common fruit tree is called mzambaraũ, in which word the last two vowels apparently unite into a sound like that in the English word how; but when -ni is added, making Mzambaráuni, at the zambaraũ tree—the name of one of the quarters of Zanzibar—the u is quite separated from the a, and the last two syllables are pronounced like the English -oony.

The shifting of the accent above referred to takes place in obedience to the universal rule in Swahili, that the main accent of the word is always put upon the last syllable but one, a rule which often changes the sound of a word so materially as to baffle a beginner in his endeavour to seize and retain it. The syllable ni is the chief disturber of accents; and words which end in it may be always suspected of being plural imperatives if they are verbs, or of being in what is known as the locative case if they are nouns. There are only a very few words which end in -ni in their simple forms.

The formation or division of syllables is so closely connected with the powers of the letters, that this will be a proper place to mention it. The rule is that all Swahili syllables end in a vowel, and that the vowel must be preceded only by a single consonant, or by one preceded by n or m, or followed by w or y.

There are a few half-assimilated Arabic words in which double consonants occur; but there is a strong tendency in all such cases to drop one of the consonants and attach the other to the vowel which follows them.

W can be placed after all the other consonants, simple and compound, except perhaps F and V.

Y can follow F, N, and V.

These two letters are used in the formation of Verbs, -w- being the sign of the passive, and -y- being used to give a transitive meaning. In several cases -fy- stands for -py-; -py- occurs in one word only, 'mpya, new.

N can be placed before D, G, J, Y, and Z.

M can be placed before B, and perhaps Ch and V.

M in these instances represents an n- used as a substantive and adjectival prefix. Used in this way, n before b becomes m; before l or r it changes the l or r into d, making nd- instead of nl- or nr-; before w it changes into m, and the w becomes b, making mb-instead of \textit{nu}-. It is curious that \textit{w} can be made to follow \textit{n} without any change, but that \textit{n} cannot be put before \textit{w}. Before \textit{k}, \textit{p}, and \textit{t}, the \textit{n} is dropped, and they become \textit{k'}, \textit{p'}, and \textit{t'}; before the other letters \textit{ch}, \textit{f}, \textit{h}, \textit{m}, \textit{n}, and \textit{s}, it is merely dropped.

The resulting syllables are not always easy of pronunciation to a European, as, for instance, \textit{nywa} in \textit{kunnywa}, to drink, nor is it very easy to pronounce \textit{ngu} or \textit{nda}; but to a native such sounds present no difficulty, whilst he can scarcely pronounce such a word as \textit{black}.

Instances of the division of syllables will be found in the specimen of \textit{Kinyume}, which forms Appendix I. Kinyume is made by taking the last syllable from the end of a word and putting it at the beginning, so that each instance is a specimen of the native idea as to what letters belong to the final syllable. Some Swahili are very ready at understanding and speaking this enigmatical dialect.

At the head of each letter in the second part will be found some observations on its use and pronunciation.
SUBSTANTIVES.

Swahili nouns have two numbers, singular and plural, which are distinguished by their initial letters. Upon the forms of the Substantives depend the forms of all Adjectives, Pronouns, and Verbs governing or governed by them. It is, therefore, necessary to divide them into so many classes as there are different forms either of Substantives or of dependent words, in order to be able to lay down rules for the correct formation of sentences. For this purpose Swahili Substantives may be conveniently divided into eight classes.

I. Those beginning with M-, 'M-, Mu-, or Mw-, in the singular, and which denote living beings. They make their plural by changing M- &c. into Wa-.

Mtu, a man; watu, people.

The singular prefix represents in all its forms the syllable Mu-, which is itself very rarely heard. Before a consonant it is almost always pronounced as a semi-vowel m, with the u sound before rather than after it. Before a and e the u becomes a consonant, and the prefix appears as mw-. Before o and u the u is very frequently dropped, and the m alone is heard. The prefix is treated as a distinct syllable when followed by a consonant, but very rarely so when followed by a vowel.

Mchawi, a wizard; wachawi, wizards.
Mjusi, a lizard; wajusi, lizards.
Mwana, a son; waana, sons.
Mwoga, or moga, a coward; waoga, cowards.
Muumishi, or numishi, a cupper; waumishi, cuppers.

When the plural prefix wa- is placed before a word beginning with a- , the two a's run together, and are seldom distinguishable by the ear alone. When wa- is placed before a word beginning with e- or i- , the -a flows into the other vowel and produces a long e sound.

Mwenzi, a companion; wenzi, companions.
Mwivi, a thief; wevi, thieves.

II. Substantives beginning with M- , 'M- , Mu- , or Mw- , which do not denote living or animate beings. They make their plural by changing M- &c. into Mi- .

Mti, a tree; miti, trees.

The same observations apply to the singular prefix in this class as in Class I.

Mfupa, a bone; misupa, bones.
Muanzo, a beginning; mianzo, beginnings.
Mwembe, a mango tree; miembe, mango trees.
Mweva, a thorn; miweva, or miwa, thorns.
Moto, a fire; mioto, fires.

The names of trees belong to this class.

III. Those which do not change to form the plural.

Nyumba, a house; nyumba, houses.
The simple description of nouns of this class is that they begin with a, followed by some other consonant. It is probable that Ni- is the ground form of the prefix of this class, since it always appears as ny- before a vowel. The singular powers and antipathies of the letter n- very much affect the distinctness of this class of nouns. As n must be dropped before ch, f, h, k, p, s, or t, nouns beginning with those letters may belong to this class;* and as n becomes m- before b, v, and w, nouns beginning with mb or mv may belong to it. There is a further complication in Swahili, arising from the fact that foreign words, except only foreign names of persons and offices, whatever their first letters, are correctly placed in this class. The popular instinct, however, refuses this rule, and in the vulgar dialect classes foreign words according to their initial letters, regarding the first syllable as a mere prefix, and treating it accordingly (see also p. 20). In some cases words are handled in this way even in polite Swahili; thus the Arabic Kitabu, a book, is very often made plural by treating the ki- as a prefix, and saying Vitabu, for books.

- Kamba, a rope; kamba, ropes.
- Mbequ, a seed; mbequ, seeds.
- Nyumba, a house; nyumba, houses.
- Meza, a table; meza, tables.
- Bunduki, a gun; bunduki, guns.
- Ndizi, a banana; ndizi, bananas.
- Njia, a road; njia, roads.

* There is nothing to show whether nouns beginning with these letters belong to this class or to the fifth; but it is always safest in cases of doubt to treat them as belonging to this class, unless some special largeness is intended to be intimated concerning them.
IV. Those which begin with Ki- before a consonant or Ch- before a vowel. They form their plural by changing Ki- into Vi- and Ch- into Vy-.

- Kitu, a thing; vitu, things.
- Chombo, a vessel; vyombo, vessels.

Substantives are made diminutives by being brought into this class.

- Mlima, a mountain; Kilima, a hill.
- Bweta, a box; kibweta, a little box.

If the word stripped of all prefixes is a monosyllable, ji- must first be prefixed.

- Mtì, a tree; kijiti, a shrub.
- Mwiko, a spoon; kijiko, a little spoon.

Words beginning with Ki- may be turned into diminutives by inserting -ji- after the prefix.

- Kitwa, a head; kijitwa, a little head.
- Kiboko, a hippopotamus; kijiboko, a little hippopotamus.

In regard to animals, the use of the diminutive has a depreciating effect.

- Mбуzi, a goat; kibuzi, a poor little goat.

V. Those which make their plural by prefixing ma-.

- Kasha, a chest; makasha, chests.

Nouns are generally brought into this class by rejecting all prefix in the singular. If, however, the word itself begins with a vowel, j- is prefixed; if it be a monosyllable, ji- is prefixed. The j- or ji- is regularly omitted in the plural, but may be retained to avoid ambiguity, where the regular word would have resembled one formed from another root.

Jambo, an affair; mambo, affairs.
Jicho, an eye; macho, eyes.
Jumbo, a large vessel; majombo, large vessels.

If the word begin with i- or e- the -a of the plural prefix coalesces with it and forms a long -e-; this distinguishes dissyllables with j- prefixed from mono-syllables with ji- prefixed.

Jino, a tooth; meno (not mano), teeth.

Foreign names of persons and offices belong to this class.

Waziri, a vizir; mawaziri, vizirs.

In the vulgar dialect of Zanzibar all foreign words which have a first syllable that cannot be treated as a prefix, are made to belong to this class, and ma- is prefixed to form the plural (see p. 18).

Anything which is to be marked as peculiarly large or important is so described by bringing the word into this class.

Mfuko, a bag; fuko, a very large bag.
Mtu, a man; jitu, a very large man.
Nyumba, a house; jumba, a large house.

If a word is already in this class, it may be described as larger by prefixing ji-.

Mtanga, sails; majitanga, great sails.
Maji, water, Mafuta, oil, and other nouns in that form are treated as plurals of this class.

VI. Those which begin with U- in the singular. They make their plural by changing U- into Ny- before a vowel, or N- before a consonant.

Uimbo, a song; nyimbo, songs.

Udevu, a hair of the beard; ndevu, hairs of the beard.

This class is not a large one; but the formation of its plural is full of apparent irregularities produced by the letter n.

1. All nouns of this class, which are in the singular dissyllables only, retain the u- in the plural, and are treated as beginning with a vowel.

Ufa, a crack; nyufa, cracks.

Uso, a face; nyuso, faces.

2. Words in which the U- is followed by d, g, j, or z, take N- in place of U-.

3. Words in which the U- is followed by l or r, take N-, but change the l or r into d.

Ulimi, a tongue; ndimi, tongues.

4. Words in which the U- is followed by b, v, or w, take n-, but change it into m-, and their first letter is always b.

Ubau, a plank; mbau, planks.

Uwingu, a heaven; mbingu, the heavens.

5. Words in which the U- is followed by k, p, or t, drop the U-, and give an explosive sound to the first letter.

Upepo, a wind; p'epo, winds.

6. Words in which the U- is followed by ch, f, h, n, or s, merely drop the U-.

Ufunguo, a key; funguo, keys.

Nouns of this class are so few in Swahili that it is scarcely worth while to notice these distinctions; they are, however, important as explaining what would otherwise seem anomalies, and represent influences which have a much larger field in other African languages.

Abstract nouns generally belong to this class.

VII. The one word Mahali, place or places, which requires special forms in all adjectives and pronouns.

VIII. The Infinitives of Verbs used as Substantives. All Infinitives may be so used, and answer to the English Verbal Substantives in -ing.

Kufa, to die = dying.
Kwiba, to steal = stealing.

All Substantives of both numbers may be put into what may be called the locative case by adding -ni. This case has three great varieties of meaning, which are marked by differences in all dependent pronouns.

1. In, within, to or from within.
2. At, by, near.
3. To, from, at (of places far off).
SUBSTANTIVES.

Nyumbani mwangu, in my house.
Nyumbani pangu, near my house.
Nyumbani kwangu, to my house.
Mlomí, by the river.
Njianí, on the road.
Vyomboni, in the vessels.
Kitwani, on the head.
Mbinguni, in heaven.
Kuangukani, in falling.

The possessive case is expressed by the use of the Preposition -a, which see. The objective or accusative is the same as the subjective or nominative.

In the following list of Substantives the plural form is given in all cases in which, if commonly used, it is not the same as the singular.

vessel sharp at the stern, with a square matting sail. They belong to the original inhabitants of Zanzibar, and are chiefly employed in bringing firewood to the town.
Mtepe, pl. mitepe, a large open vessel sharp at the stern, with a large square matting sail; the prow is made to resemble a camel's head, and is ornamented with painting and little streamers. The planks are sewn together. There is always a white pennon at the masthead. These vessels belong chiefly to Lamoo, and the country near it.
Betela, the common dhow of Zanzibar: it has a square stern, with a low poop and a head much like those of European boats.
Bágala, pl. mabágala, large dhows with very high square sterns and tall poops, and long projecting prows.
The Indian dhows are mostly of this class; they have very often a small second mast rising from the poop (mlingote wa kalmi).
Ghangi, they resemble the Bâgalas except in not being so high in the poop or so long in the prow.
Batili, a low vessel with a long projecting prow, a sharp stern, and high rudder-head. They have often a flying poop and a second mast.
They belong to the piratical Arabs from the Persian Gulf.
Bedeni, a dhow with a sharp stern and high rudder-head, and a per-

DIVISIONS OF TIME.

There are two years in use in Zanzibar; that which is most commonly heard of is the Arab year of twelve lunar months. It cannot be more than about 355 days long, and has therefore no correspondence to the seasons. The months are determined by the sight of the new moon, or by the expiration of thirty days since the beginning of the previous month. It happens sometimes that some of the coast towns will begin their months a day before or after what was taken as its first day in Zanzibar. A gun is usually fired from one of the ships when the month begins. Practically the Ramathan is treated as the first month, and the rest are reckoned from it; the word by which they are denoted seems to mean not fasting, as though the Ramathan being the month of fasting, the rest were the first, second, third, &c., of not fasting, until the months of Rajab and Shaban, which have both a special religious character
The following are the names of the Arab months, with their Swahili equivalents:

The two great Mohammedan feasts are held on the first of Shaowal, when every one gives presents, and on the tenth of Th'il hajjah, when every one is supposed to slaughter some animal and feast the poor.

The other year in use among the Swahili is the Nautical and Agricultural year; it is roughly a solar year, having 365 days. It is reckoned to begin from the Siku a mwaka (answering to the Persian Nairuz), which now occurs towards the end of August. The last day of the old year is called Kigunzi, and the days are reckoned by decades, called miongo, sing. mwongo. Thus—Mwongo wa mia consists of the days between 90 and 100. Mwongo wanjupi? asks which decade it is. The Siku a mwaka is kept as a great day, and formerly had a number of special observances connected with it. In the night or early in the morning every one used to bathe in the sea; the women are particularly careful to do so. They afterwards fill a large pot with grain and pulse, and cook them. About noon they serve out to all friends who come; all the fires are extinguished with water and lighted again by rubbing wood. Formerly no inquiry was made as to any one killed or hurt on this day, and it is still the custom to go armed and to be on the guard against private enemies. It used to be a favourite amusement to throw any Indians that could be caught into the sea, and otherwise ill-use them, until the British Government interfered for their protection. The year is called after the day of the week on which it began; thus, in 1865 it began on Thursday and was Mwaka Alhamisi; in 1866 on Friday, and was Mwaka Juma, and so on.

The seasons will be found briefly mentioned under that word.

The week has been reconstructed on the Arab week, retaining only the Arab names of two days, Alhamisi and Juma (Thursday and Friday), which answer to our Satur-day and Sunday for Mohammedan religious purposes, and are the days which slaves in the country are generally allowed for their own recreation or profit. Juma is so named from the assembly held on that day for public worship; the Arab names of the rest are merely those used by English Quakers, first, second, third, &c.

The day begins at sunset; to-night therefore in the mouth of a Swahili means what an Englishman would call last night. As the days are of a very nearly uniform length there is little practical incorrectness in taking sunset as six o’clock in the evening and reckoning the night first and then the day from it, hour by hour. Thus, seven, eight, and nine are the first, second, and third of the night (saa a kwanza, a pilu, a tatu ya usiku). Midnight is the sixth hour, saa a sita. Five in the morning is the eleventh hour of the night, saa a edhashara. Nine o’clock in the morning is the third hour of the day, saa a tatu. Twelve at noon is the sixth hour, saa a sita, and four and five the tenth and eleventh hours, saa a kumi, saa a edhashara. Sunset is determined by observation, and a gun is fired, and the Sultan’s flag hauled down to mark it. During the Ramathan a gun is fired at half-past two in the morning to warn every one of the approach of morning, that they may get their cooking and eating over before dawn. This gun-fire is called daakuu.

There is another way of marking the time by reference chiefly to the hours of prayer (see Prayer); the following are the chief points

Mbagiri, sunset.
Mshuko wa magaribi (coming out from sunset prayers), about halfpast six.
Esha or Isha, from half-past six to eight.

ADJECTIVES AND NUMERALS.

Adjectives.

Adjectives always follow the Substantives they agree with.

Mtu mwema, a good man.

Regular Swahili Adjectives are made to agree with the Substantives they qualify by prefixing to them the initial syllables proper to the class of their Substantives, in the singular or plural, as the case may be. The minor rules laid down in regard to the prefixes of Substantives are applicable to Adjectives and their prefixes. The following instances will illustrate the ordinary application of these rules:

Class I.

M-tu 'm-baya, a bad man.
Wa-tu wa-baya, bad men.
M-tu mw-eupe, a white man.
Wa-tu w-eupe, white men.

Substantives of whatever class denoting living beings may have their Adjectives in the forms proper to the first class.

Mbuzi m-kubwa, a large goat.
Mbuzi wa-kubwa, large goats
Mbuzi mw-ekundu, a red goat.
Mbuzi w-ekundu, red goats.
Waziri mwema, a good vizir.
Mawaziri wema, good vizirs.
Kijana mwema, a good youth.
Vijana wema, good youths.

Class II. M-ti m-zuri, a fine tree.
Mi-ti mi-zuri, fine trees.
M-ti mw-ema, a good tree.
Mi-ti mi-ema, or m-ema, good trees.

Class III. Ny-umba n-zuri, a fine house.
Ny-umba n-zuri, fine houses.
Ny-umba ny-eupe, a white house.
Ny-umba ny-eupe, white houses.

Class IV. Ki-tu ki-refu, a long thing.
Vi-tu vi-refu, long things.
Ki-tu ch-epesi, a light thing.
Vi-tu vy-epesi, light things.

Class V. Kasha zito, a heavy chest.
Ma-kasha ma-zito, heavy chests.
Kasha j-ekundu, a red chest.
Ma-kasha m-ekundu, red chests.

Class VI. U-imbo m-zuri, a beautiful song.
Ny-imbo n-zuri, beautiful songs.
U-bau m-refu, a long plank.
M-bau n-defu, long planks.

Class VII. Mahali pa-pana, a broad place, or broad places.
Mahali p-eusi, a black place, or black places.

Class VIII. Ku-fa ku-zuri, a fine death.
Ku-fa kw-ema, a good death.

It will be seen at once from the above examples how to make the Adjective agree with its Substantive in ordinary cases. The following rules must be remembered in order to avoid mistakes:

1. Adjectives beginning with a vowel require prefixes which end in a consonant, wherever possible, as in the above instances, mweupe, mwekundu, mwema, chepesi, kwema.
2. Adjectives beginning with a vowel must have j-prefixed when they are made to agree with nouns like kasha, as in the instance given above of kasha jekundu, a red chest. Monosyllabic adjectives prefix ji, as in kasha jipya, a new chest.

3. Prefixes ending in -a, when they are put before adjectives beginning with e-, merge the a into the first letter of the adjective, as in the instances, weupe, wekundu, mekundu, peusi. This suppression of the a is more noticeable in Adjectives than in Substantives, and occurs even in the few Adjectives which begin with -o-; -a before i coalesces with it and forms e.

\[\begin{align*} Weusi &= wa-eusi. \\
  Pema &= pa-emu. \\
  Wengi &= wa-ingi. \\
  Meupe &= ma-eupe. \\
  Mororo &= ma-ororo.
\end{align*}\]

4. Adjectives beginning with a consonant are subject to the same rules when n is to be prefixed as Substantives of the third class and plurals of the sixth. The rules are given at length under Class VI. of Substantives. The following instances will show their application to Adjectives:

\[\begin{align*}
  Nyumba & \{ \text{ndogo, little} \} & n \text{ prefixed.} \\
  Mbau & \{ \text{ngeni, strange} \} & n \text{ prefixed.} \\
  Nyimbo & \{ \text{nzuri, fine} \} & n \text{ prefixed.} \\
  \quad & \{ \text{ndefu, long—r becomes d.} \} \\
  \quad & \{ \text{mbovu, rotten—n becomes m.} \} \\
  \quad & \{ \text{mhili, two—nw becomes mb.} \} \\
  \quad & \{ \text{kubwa, great} \} \\
  \quad & \{ \text{nene, thick} \} \\
  \quad & \{ \text{pana, broad} \} \\
  \quad & \{ \text{temu, sweet} \} \\
  \quad & \{ \text{chache, few} \} \\ \quad & \{ \text{fupi, short} \} \\
  \end{align*}\]
Besides the many apparent irregularities in these n formations, there are two or three really irregular forms. These are njema or njema (not nyema), good, and 'npya (not pya), new.

Adjectives beginning with a vowel are, like the corresponding Substantives, regularly formed by prefixing ny- , as in the instance given, nyeupe, from -eupe, white.

Instances are given in the list of Adjectives where there is likely to be any practical difficulty in knowing what form to use.

- Ote, all, and -enyi, or -inyi, having or with, are not treated as Adjectives, but as Pronouns. Instances illustrating their changes will be found under each. On the other hand -ngapi, how many? is treated as an Adjective.

Irregular Adjectives.

Although Swahili is rich in Adjectives when compared with other African languages of the same family, it is very poor in comparison with English. The place of the English Adjective is supplied—

1. By Arabic words which are used as Adjectives but do not vary.

   Rahisi, cheap.
   Laini, smooth.

2. By a verb expressing generally in the present imperfect to become, and in the present perfect to be, possessed of the quality denoted.

   Fimbo imenyoka, the stick is straight.
   Fimbo iliyonyoka, a straight stick.
   Fimbo imepotoka, the stick is crooked.
   Fimbo iliyopotoka, a crooked stick.
   Mtungi umejaa, the jar is full.
   Mtungi uliojaa, a full jar.
3. By a Substantive connected with the thing qualified by the particle -a, of.

Mtu wa choyo, a greedy person.
Mtu wa akili, a man of understanding, a wise man.

If it is wished to predicate the quality of any person or thing, the verb kuwa na, to have, must be used.

Ana choyo, he is greedy.
Kina taka, it is dirty.

4. By the use of the word -enyi or -inyi, which may be translated by having or with.

Mtu mwenyi asifa, a healthy person.
Kitu chenyi mviringo, a round thing.
Kamba zenyi nguvu, strong ropes.
Embe yenyi maji, a juicy mango.

When -enyi is followed by a Verb in the Infinitive, it answers to our participle in -ing.

Mwenyi kupenda, loving.

5. By the use of Adjectival Substantives which change only to form the plural.

Kipofu, blind, or a blind person, pl. Vipofu, blind, or blind people.

Where in English a special stress is laid upon the Adjective, in Swahili the relative is inserted.

Jiwe kubwa, a large stone.
Jiwe likilo kubwa, a large stone, literally, a stone that is large.
Mtu wa haki, a just man.
Mtu aliye wa haki, a just man.

The Comparison of Adjectives.

There are not, properly speaking, any degrees of comparison in Swahili.
The Comparative degree as it exists in English is represented in several ways.

1. By the use of kuliko, where there is, the idea being that when the two things are brought together one of them is marked by the possession of the quality mentioned, whence it follows that it must possess it in a more eminent degree than the other.

Saa hii njema kuliko ile, this watch is good (or the best) where that is, i.e., this watch is better than that.

Tamul kuliko asali, sweeter than honey.

2. By the use of zayidi ya, more than, or of punde, a little more.

Unguja mji mkubwa zayidi ya Mvita, Zanzibar is a large town more than Mombas, i.e., Zanzibar is a larger town than Mombas.

Kitu kirefu punde, something a little longer.

3. By the use of kupita, to pass or surpass.

Salimu ampita Abdallah, Salim is better than Abdallah.

Ndiyo tamu yapita asali, it is sweet, it passes honey, i.e., it is sweeter than honey.

4. Comparison of one time with another may be expressed by the use of the Verbs kuzidi, to increase, kupungua, to diminish.

Mti umezidi kuzaa, the tree has borne more fruit than it did previously.

The Superlative may be denoted by the use of the Adjective in its simple form, in an absolute sense.

Mananasi mema ya wapi? Where are the best pines?

Ndiyo mema, these are the best.

Ni yupi alito mwema? Who is the best of them?

When this form is used of two only, it is more correctly Englished by the Comparative than by the Superlative. So conversely where the Comparative forms are so used as to apply to many or all, they must be translated by Superlatives.

Saa hii njema kuliko zote, this watch is the best of all.

Ali avapita wote, Ali surpasses them all, or, is the best of all.

Numerals.

There are two sets of numerals in use in Zanzibar; one is properly Swahili, the other Arabic, but in a Swahiliized form.

The numbers from one to ten are as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>English</th>
<th>Swahili</th>
<th>Arabic</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>One</td>
<td>Mosi</td>
<td>Wáhid</td>

</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nine</td>
<td>Kenda</td>
<td>Tissa or Tissia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ten</td>
<td>Kumi</td>
<td>’Ashara</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

It will be seen that for six and seven there are only the Arabic names. The other Arabic numbers under ten are not very commonly used, but for numbers above ten the Arabic are more used than the purer Swahili.

<table>

</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eighty</td>
<td>Makumi manane</td>
<td>Themaniini</td>

<tr>
<td>Ninety</td>
<td>Makumi kenda</td>

</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The intermediate numbers are expressed in the pure Swahili by adding na moja, na mbili, &c. Thus forty-one is makumi manne na moja; forty-five is makumi manne na tano, and so on. In the Arabic, the smaller number precedes the larger. Twenty-one is wáhid u ishrin, forty-five is khámsi u arobain. The mode of counting most usual in Zanzibar is to employ the Arabic names for the larger numbers, but to follow the Swahili order, thus—

There is no negro word in use for a hundred; the Arabic mia is universally employed, and for several hundreds the numeral follows it, as mia tatu, three hundred. If the Arabic numerals are used they precede the word mia, thelatha mia = three hundred. The Arabic dual miteen is very commonly used to express two hundred.

There is a Swahili word for a thousand, kikwi, but it is very rarely used except in poetry. The common word is the Arabic elfu. This is used in the same way as mia; thus, elfu tatu is three thousand, elfu tano, five thousand, &c. The Arabic dual elfeen, two thousand, is more common than elfu mbili. If the Arabic numerals are employed the small number comes first, the plural form alāf is employed, and the final of the small number is heard, thus thelāthat alāf is three thousand, khāmset alāf, five thousand, and so on.

Lakki is used for ten thousand, and the word milyon is known, but is rarely employed, and perhaps never with exactitude.

Fungate occurs for seven, as denoting the days spent by the bridegroom in his bride’s company after marriage.

Mwongo, plur. miongo, occurs for a ten or a decade, in reckoning the nautical year.

Both these words occur in cognate African languages as cardinal numbers.

When used in enumerating actual things, and not in mere arithmetical computation, six of the Swahili numbers are treated as regular Adjectives, the other four remaining unchanged. The following table will show the forms proper to each class of Substantives.

The number always follows the Substantive.

One man, mtu mmoja.

If an adjective is employed, the numeral follows the adjective, thus exactly reversing the English order.

Two good men, watu wema wawili.

The Ordinal numbers are expressed by the use of the variable particle -a. (See Prepositions.)

The third man, mtu wa tatu.
The fourth house, nyumba ya 'nne.
The fifth chair, kili cha tano.

The Ordinal numbers are:

First, -a mosi, or more commonly -a kwanza.
Second, -a pili.
Third, -a tatu.
Fourth, -a 'nne.
Fifth, -a tano.
ADJECTIVES AND NUMERALS. 93

Sixth, -a sita.
Seventh, -a saba.
Eighth, -a naale.
Ninth, -a henda.

Tenth, -a kumi.
&c. &c.
Last, -a mwicho.

Once, twice, &c., are denoted by the use of marra, or \textit{mara}, a time.

\begin{itemize}
  \item Once, \textit{mara moja}.
  \item The first time, \textit{mara ya kwanza}.
  \item Twice, \textit{mara mbili}.
  \item The second time, \textit{mara ya pili}.
  \item How many times? \textit{Mara ngapi?}
  \item Often, \textit{mara nyingi}.
\end{itemize}

Fractions may be expressed by the use of \textit{fungu}, a part, as

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textit{Fungu la thelathini}, a thirtieth.
\end{itemize}

The only fractions in common use are the parts of a dollar, which are thus expressed in forms borrowed from the Arabic:

\begin{itemize}
  \item One-sixteenth—\textit{Nuss ya themuni}.
  \item One-eighth—\textit{Themuni, or Themni, or Ze'mni}.
  \item Three-sixteenths—\textit{Themuni na nuss ya themuni}.
  \item One-fifth—\textit{Zerenge}.
  \item One-quarter—\textit{Robo}.
  \item Five-sixteenths—\textit{Robo na nuss ya themuni}.
  \item Three-eighths—\textit{Robo na themuni}.
  \item Seven-sixteenths—\textit{Robo na themuni na nuss ya themuni}.
  \item One-half—\textit{Nuss}.
  \item Nine-sixteenths—\textit{Nuss na nuss ya themuni}.
  \item Five-eighths—\textit{Nuss na themuni}.
  \item Eleven-sixteenths—\textit{Nuss na themuni na nuss ya themuni}.
  \item Three-quarters—\textit{Kassa robo} [i.e., a dollar less by a quarter].
  \item Thirteen-sixteenths—\textit{Kassa robo na nuss ya themuni}.
  \item Seven-eighths—\textit{Kassa themuni}.
  \item Fifteen-sixteenths—\textit{Kassa nuss ya themuni}.
\end{itemize}

Numbers treated as Substantives make their plurals by prefixing \textit{ma}-:

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textit{Makumi mawili}, two tens, \textit{i.e.}, twenty.
  \item \textit{Mamoja pia}, all ones, \textit{i.e.}, all the same.
\end{itemize}

PRONOUNS.

PERSONAL PRONOUNS.

The full forms of the Personal Pronouns are—

I, Mimi.
Thou, Weve.
He or she, Yeye.
We, Sisi or Swiswi.
You, Nyinyi or Nwinyi.
They, Wao.

The second and third persons singular are often contracted into Wee and Yee. The second person singular is always used where one person only is to be denoted.

There are no special forms for it and they when referring to inanimate things. If any special emphasis makes it necessary, the Demonstrative Pronouns agreeing with the nouns referred to must be used. Similarly, for he or she and they, the Demonstrative Pronouns proper to the first class may be used, when any special emphasis is to be expressed.

The objective cases, me, thee, him, her, us, them, are expressed by the same forms as those given above for the subjective case, I, thou, &c.

The possessive case, of me, of thee, of him, &c., is generally expressed by the Possessive Pronouns (which see, p. 109); there is thus no distinction between of me and mine, of thee and thine, &c.

_Habari zangu_, my news, or news of me.

The Possessive Pronouns proper to animate beings may be used of inanimate things also; _ake_, its, and _ao_, their, being used for _of it_ and _of them_, in reference to all nouns of whatever class they may be.

The possessive case may be regarded as an instance of the Personal Pronouns in a special form subjoined to the variable preposition _-a_, of.

The Preposition _na_, with _or_ and, is commonly joined with short forms of the Personal Pronoun to express _and_ or _with me_, _and_ or _with you_, &c. &c.

_Nami_, and _or_ with _me_.
_Nawe_, and _or_ with _you_.
_Naye_, and _or_ with _him_ or _her_.
_Nao, Nayo, Nacho, Nalo, Napo_,
_Nako_, and _or_ with _it._

_Nasi_ or _Naswi_, and _or_ with _us_.
_Nanyi_ or _Nanwi_, and _or_ with _you_.
_Nao_, and _or_ with _them_.
_Nao, Nayo, Nazo, Navyo, Napo_, _and_ or with _them_.

The above forms may be used for either the objective or subjective cases after _and_. _Nami_ = and _I_ or _and me_, _Nawe_ = and _thou_ or _and thee_, &c. &c.

It will be seen that in referring to animate beings the latter half of the full form of the Personal Pronoun is suffixed to the _na_-; and in referring to inanimate things the syllable suffixed is that which denotes the relative (see Relative Pronouns, p. 117), a syllable which occurs also as the final syllable of those Demonstrative Pronouns which refer to a thing mentioned before.

Other Prepositions, that is to say, _kwa_ and _katika_, are constructed with the full form of the Personal Pronoun referring to animate beings, and with the Demonstrative Pronouns, where necessary, referring to inanimate things. This rule distinguishes the preposition kwa, for, by, &c., from the form of the variable -a required by substantives of the eighth class and sometimes by the case in -ni.

Kwa mimi, for me.  Kwangu, of me or my, to my [house].

The prefixes used in conjugating the verb to mark the subject and object may be regarded as shortened forms of the Personal Pronouns. The objective and subjective cases are denoted by slightly different forms.

It will be most convenient to take the prefixes denoting animate beings first, as they alone can be used in the first and second person. The following are the subjective or nominative forms:

I,  Ni- or N-
Thou, U- or W-
He or she, A- (or Yu-).

We,  Tu- or Tw-
You, M- or Mw-
They,  Wa-

The rule for applying these prefixes is that the forms ending with a vowel are used when they are to be immediately followed by a consonant, and those ending in a consonant are used before a vowel. In the third person, both singular and plural, the vowel remains unchanged before o or u, it coalesces with e and i into an e, and merges into an a, so as to be no longer distinguishable. Thus, where the verb or tense prefix begins with a, the third person singular is apparently without prefix and the third person plural is marked only by a w-. Examples of and further observations on these prefixes will be found under Verbs, as playing an important part in their conjugation. The form yu- is but seldom used for the third person singular, and very rarely with any but monosyllabic verbs.

The syllables which stand for the objective or accusative case of the Personal Pronouns denoting animate beings, when they are connected with Verbs, are—

- Me, -ni- or -n-.
- Us, -tu- or -tw-.
- Thee, -ku- or -kw-.
- You, -wa-.
- Him or her, -m- or -mw-.
- Them, -wa-.

The same rules as above apply to the use of forms ending in a consonant before a vowel, and forms ending in a vowel before a consonant.

As the forms proper to the first class of Nouns denote animate beings, there remain seven classes denoting inanimate things, each of which has its appropriate subjective and objective pronominal forms when conjoined with a verb. The subjective pronominal prefixes are—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Class</th>
<th>II. sing. U- or W-</th>
<th>plur. I- or Y-</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>III.</td>
<td>&quot; I- &quot; Y- &quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Zi- &quot; Z-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV.</td>
<td>&quot; Ki- &quot; Ch- &quot;</td>

</tr>
<tr>
<td>VIII.</td>
<td>&quot; Ku- &quot; Kw- &quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Ku- &quot; Kw-</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Here also the forms ending in a vowel are used before a consonant, and the forms ending in a consonant are used before a vowel. Examples of their use will be found in the sections on the conjugation of the Verb.

There, used as the subject of a verb, is expressed by ku- or pa- employed as personal prefixes. Ku- is the more indefinite of the two. One, they, or people used to denote what is customary, are expressed by the prefix hu-

The objective forms in reference to inanimate objects are very similar to the subjectives.

In these forms also u becomes v, and i y, before vowels.

The following examples will illustrate the use of the objective syllables: they are parted off from the rest of the word by hyphens. Instances are given of both vowel and consonantal verbs.

Class I. A-ni-penda, he loves me.
A-n-ambia, he tells me.
A-ku-penda, he loves you.
A-kw-ambia, he tells you.
Na-m-penda, I love him.
Na-mw-ambia, I tell him
A-tu-penda, he loves us.
A-tw-ambia, he tells us.
A-wa-penda, he loves you.
A-wa-ambia, he tells you.
A-wa-penda, he loves them.
A-wa-ambia, he tells them.

II. A-u-penda, he likes it (mti, a tree).
A-v-ona, he sees it.
A-i-penda, he likes them (mti, trees).
A-y-ona, he sees them.

III. A-i-penda, he likes it (nyumba, a house).
A-y-ona, he sees it.
A-zi-penda, he likes them (nyumba, houses).
A-zi-ona, he sees them.
Class IV. A-ki-penda, he likes it (kitu, a thing).
   A-ki-ona, he sees it.
   A-vi-penda, he likes them (vitu, things).
   A-vi-ona, he sees them.

V. A-li-penda, he likes it (kasha, a chest).
   A-li-ona, he sees it.
   A-ya-penda, he likes them (makasha, chests).
   A-ya-ona, he sees them.

VI. A-u-penda, he likes it (uimbo, a song).
    A-w-ona, he sees it (ubau, a plank).
    A-zi-penda, he likes them (nyimbo, songs).
    A-zi-ona, he sees them (mbau, planks).

VII. A-pa-penda, he likes it or them (place or places).
     A-pa-ona, he sees it or them.

VIII. A-ku-penda, he likes it (kwiba, stealing).
      A-ku-ona, he sees it.

In all cases the Pronominal Syllable representing the subject is the first prefix, and therefore the first syllable of the word; and the syllable representing the object is the last of the prefixes and immediately precedes the verb.

A-takapo-ku-ona, when he shall see you.
Wa-ipoki-m-penda, when they loved him.
A-ki-ku-ita, if he calls you.

It is quite allowable for the sake of emphasis to use the full forms of the Personal Pronouns as well as the subjective and objective syllables.

Mimi nakupenda weve, I love you.
Weve wanipenda mimi, you love me.

When so used, however, a very strong emphasis is put upon the persons loving and loved, and unless such an emphasis is intended the full forms ought not to be used. The above phrases might be better translated by—For myself I love you the best; and, It is you who love me.
In poetical Swahili an objective suffix is used as well as the objective prefix. The syllables used as a suffix are the same as those given before with na (see p. 103). The suffixes are not used in the dialect of Zanzibar.

_Uniquehifathimi_, do thou preserve me. (Both the _-ni_ and the _-mi_ represent the object of the verb.)
_Aka-zi-angusha-zo_, and he threw them down. (Both the _-zi_ and the _-zo_ represent the object of the verb.)
_Na-wa-ambia-ni_, I tell you.

The use of the objective prefix implies a reference to some ascertained object: it is therefore properly used wherever in English the object would be expressed by a Pronoun. Where in English the object would not be expressed by a Pronoun, the objective prefix has the effect of a definite article, and its omission that of an indefinite article.

_Nataka kununua nyumba_ (no objective prefix being used), I want to buy a house.
_Nataka kununua nyumba_ (the objective prefix _-i_ being used).
I want to buy the house.
_Naona mtu_, I see somebody.
_Namwona mtu_, I see the man.

Where a Demonstrative Pronoun is used with the object, the objective prefix must always be used.

_Nataka kununua nyumba hii_, I want to buy this house.
_Namwona mtu yule_, I see that man yonder.

The objective prefix is used where anything about the person or thing is about to be stated.

_Na-m-jua aliko_ [I know of him where he is], I know where he is.
_Nali-m-thania anekuwa_ [I thought of him, he had died], I thought he was dead.
_Aka-m-kata kitwa_ [and he cut of him the head], and he cut off his head.
Pronouns.

Possessive Pronouns.

The Possessive Pronouns are always placed after the Substantive denoting the thing possessed, and vary according to its Class and Number.

The unvarying parts of the Possessive Pronouns are:

My, -angu.  Our, -etu.
Thy, -ako.  Your, -enu.
His, her, or its, -ale.  Their, -ao.

The same forms are used for its and their, of whatever class the thing possessing may be.

In many dialects of Swahili the form of the third person singular is -akwe, and in some that of the second is -akwo.

The above forms may be used as enclitics, and frequently are so with some common words, such as baba, father, mama, mother, mwana, child, mwenzé, companion, &c. When the final letter of the substantive is -a, -e, or -i, it merges into the first letter of the possessive suffix.

Mwanangu, my child.
Mwenzangu, my companion.
Mwanako, thy child.
Mwenzako, thy companion.
Mwanake, his or her child.
Mwenzake, his or her companion.
Mwanetu, our child.
Mwenzetu, our companion.
Mwanenu, your child.
Mwenzenu, your companion.
Mwanao, their child.
Mwenzao, their companion.
The initial letters proper to each class of Substantives are:

<table>

<th>plur. w-</th>
<th>Class</th>
<th>V. sing. l-</th>
<th>plur. y-</th>

Besides these forms proper to the several classes, Substantives in the locative case in -ni require special forms of the Possessive Pronouns according to the meaning of the case. These forms are the same for all Substantives, of whatever class or number they may be.

1. When the case denotes being within, or to, or from within, the Possessive Pronouns must begin with mw-.
2. Where the case denotes mere nearness, and can be translated at, by, or near, the Possessive Pronouns must begin with p-.
3. For all other meanings the Possessive Pronouns must begin with kw-.

The following instances will show how all these rules are applied:

Class I. Mtu wangu, my man.
- Watu wako, thy men.
- Mbuzi wake, his or her goat.
- Mbuzi wetu, our goats.
- Waziri wake, his vizir.
- Mawaziri wake, his vizirs.

" II. Miti wenu, your tree.
- Miti yao, their trees.

" III. Nyumba yangu, my house.
- Nyumbo zako, thy house.

" IV. Kiti chake, his chair.
- Viti vyetu, our chairs.

" V. Kasha lenu, your chest.
- Makasha yao, their chests.
Class VI. Uimbo wangu, my song.
Nyimbo zako, thy songs.

VII. Mahali pake, his, her, or its place or places.

VIII. Kufa hwetu, our dying.
1. Nyumbani mwen, in your house or houses.
2. Nyumbani pao, near their house or houses.
3. Nyumbani kwangu, to my house.

All the Possessive Pronouns will be found in the Table of Concor-ds (p. 82), arranged under the classes to which they are appropriate. The Personal Pronouns may be added to give emphasis.

Kisu changu mimi, my own knife.
Vyangu mimi, they are mine.

The Possessive Pronoun is used for the preposition -a, of, where it is intended to mark particularly the person whose the thing is.

Kiti cha sultani, the sultan's chair, or a sultan's chair.
Kiti chake sultani, the sultan's own chair, or this sultan's chair.

There is another and short enclitic form for the Possessive Pronouns of the second and third persons singular, which is much used with some common words, such as mume, husband, mke, wife, ndugu, brother or sister, &c. They consist of -o for the second person and -e for the third, with the appropriate initial letters for each class as given above (p. 110).

Mumewe, her husband.
Mkevo, or mkeo, thy wife.
Mwenziwe, his companion.
Jinalo, thy name.
Shogaye, her friend.

It will be seen from the above tables that there is absolutely nothing to distinguish the singular and plural of Substantives in the form of the third class which denote animate beings, when joined with Possessive Pronouns. It is probably for this reason, and to avoid ambiguity, that they are frequently treated as ordinary Substantivies of that class.

Ndugu yangu, my brother.
Nduguye or Ndugu yake, his brother.
Nduguzo or Ndugu zako, thy brothers.
Mbuzi zetu, our goats.

Possessive Pronouns are sometimes used in English where Personal Pronouns are used in Swahili.

Waka-m-funga mikono nyuma [and they tied him hands behind], and they tied his hands behind him.
Ali-m-kata kitwa [he cut him head], he cut off his head.

After verbs of coming and going Possessive Pronouns beginning with z- (or in other dialects with vy- or th-) are used somewhat as—his way, &c., were used in old English.

Amekwenda zake, he has gone away, or he has gone off.
Twende zetu, let us be going.
Wamekuja zao, they have come home, or they have come away.

Reflective Pronouns.

The Swahili verb is made reflective by prefixing -ji-, as if it were a pronoun in the objective form.

Na-ji-penda, I love myself.

Self may be translated by the Arabic word, nefsi, nafsi, or nafusi; or by the word moyo, a heart, plur. mioyo or nyoyo.

Nafsi yangu, or moyo wangu, myself.
Nafsi zetu, or nyoyo zetu, ourselves.
PRONOUNS.

Itself, themselves, &c., may also be expressed by the word -enyewe with the proper prefix.

Class I. Mtu mwenyewe, the man himself.
Watu wenyewe, the people themselves.
Mbuzi mwenyewe, the goat itself.
Mbuzi wenyewe, the goats themselves.
Waziri mwenyewe, the vizir himself.
Mawaziri wenyewe, the vizirs themselves.

II. Mti mwenyewe, the tree itself.
Miti wenyewe, the trees themselves.

III. Nyumba yenyeve, the house itself.
Nyumba zenyeve, the houses themselves.

IV. Kitu chenyewe, the thing itself.
Vitu vyenyewe, the things themselves.

V. Kasha lenyewe, the chest itself.
Makasha yenyeve, the chests themselves.

VI. Uimbo mwenyewe, the song itself.
Nyimbo zenyeve, the songs themselves.

VII. Mahali penyewe, the place itself.

Mwenyewe may be used for myself and thyself, as well as for himself or herself.

Wenyewe may be used for ourselves and yourselves, as well as for themselves.

By myself, by ourselves, &c., are expressed by peke with the appropriate Possessive Pronoun.

Peke yangu, by myself, or I only.
Peke yetu, by ourselves, or we only.

Demonstrative Pronouns.

There are three Demonstrative Pronouns. 1, denoting objects at no great distance. 2, denoting objects previously mentioned. 3, denoting objects at a distance. They have each forms proper to the several classes of Substantives and to the three meanings of the case in -ni.
1. This or that, these or those, of objects at no great distance.

Class I. Mtu huyo, this man.
   Watu hawa, these people.
   Mbuzi huyo, this goat.
   Mbuzi hawa, these goats.
   Waziri huyo, this vizir.
   Mawaziri hawa, these vizirs.

II. Mti huu, this tree.
   Miti hizi, these trees.

III. Nyumba hizi, this house.
   Nyumba hizi, these houses.

IV. Kitu hiki, this thing.
   Vitu hivi, these things.

V. Kasha hili, this chest.
   Makasha haya, these chests.

VI. Uimbo huu, this song.
   Nyimbo hizi, these songs.

VII. Mahali hapa, this place.

VIII. Kufa huku, this dying.
   1. Nyumbani humo (humu (?)), here, in the house.
   2. Nyumbani hapa, here, by the house.
   3. Nyumbani huku, here, to the house.

It will be observed that the second syllable of each of these Demonstratives is the pronominal syllable given at p. 105, and that all begin with h-, followed by the vowel of the pronominal syllable.

2. This or that, these or those, referring to something mentioned before. Both the other forms can also be used in this sense.

Class I. Mtu huyo, that man.
   Watu hao, those people.
   Mbuzi huyo, that goat.
   Mbuzi hao, those goats.

II. Mti huu, that tree.
   Miti huu, those trees.

III. Nyumba hizi, that house.
   Nyumba hizo, those houses.
PRONOUNS.

Class IV. Kitu hicho, that thing.

Vitu hivyo, those things.

V. Kasha hilo, that chest.

Makasha hayo, those chests.

VI. Uimbo huo, that song.

Nyimbo hizo, those songs.

VII. Mahali hapo, that place or those places.

VIII. Kufa huko, that dying.

1. Nyumbani humo, in that house.
2. Nyumbani hapo, by that house.
3. Nyumbani huko, to that house.

3. That and those or yonder, referring to things at a distance.

Class I. Mtu yule, yonder man.

Watu wale, those people.

Mbuzi yule, that goat.

Mbuzi wale, those goats.

II. Mti ule, that tree.

Miti ile, those trees.

III. Nyumba ile, that house.

Nyumba zile, those houses.

IV. Kitu kile or chile, that thing.

Vitu vile, those things.

V. Kasha ile, that chest.

Makasha yale, those chests.

VI. Uimbo ule, that song.

Nyimbo zile, those songs.

VII. Mahali pale, that place or those places.

VIII. Kufa kule, that dying.

1. Nyumbani mle, in that house.
2. Nyumbani pale, by that house.
3. Nyumbani kule, to that house.

It will be seen that these last Pronouns are made by adding -le to the second syllable of the first set of Demonstratives. Sometimes the whole of the first form is retained, making huyule, hawale, huule, hiile, hizile, hikile, hivile, hilile, hayale, hapale, hukule.
An increase of distance is denoted by a stress on the final syllable.

Mtu yule, that man yonder.
Yulee, that one further off.
Yuleee, that one still further.

The more stress is laid on the final syllable, and the more the voice rises into a falsetto, so much the greater is the distance denoted.

When the substantive is mentioned the demonstrative always follows it.

The demonstratives are frequently doubled, and then have the meaning of just this, that very, &c.

Palepale, just there.
Mti uleule, that very tree.
Maneno yaleyale, just those words.

With the first set of demonstratives the final or true pronominal syllable is doubled and prefixed to the usual form.

Papahapa, just here.
Vivihivi, just these things.
Zizihizi, those very, &c.
Kukuhuku, just to this place.

These forms are also used to denote that there is nothing special about what is mentioned.

Zizihizi, just these and no more.

Huyo is often used when people are chasing a man or an animal.

Huyo! Huyo! = There he is! There he is!

There are other forms which ought probably to be regarded as demonstratives, as they have the force of, This is it, and, This is not it.

The negative is made by substituting si- for ndi.

Siye, it is not he. Sicho, &c. &c., this is not it.

Both forms may be used interrogatively.

Ndiye? Is it he? Siye? Is it not he?

Other demonstratives may be used with these for the sake of greater emphasis or clearness.

RELATIVE PRONOUNS.

The Relative Pronouns have special forms appropriate to the several classes of Substantives and the three meanings of the -ni case.

These relatives occur most frequently in their simple forms in connection with -ote, all.

\text{po pote, wheresoever or whenever.}\\
\text{ko kote, whithersoever or wheresoever.}\\

When connected with the substantive verb, to be, that verb is represented by the syllable -li-.

1. mulimo, wherein there is.
2. palipo, where there is.
3. kuliko, where there is.

There is a disposition in Zanzibar to make -o the general relative. Thus one very often hears alio for aliye, lilio for lililo, and ilio for ilio.

When joined with the verb the syllable denoting the relative follows the sign of the tense if there is one. The relative may be joined with the verb to form the present, or rather, an indefinite tense, without the use of any sign of time whatever. It is made precisely as in the examples given above of the use of the relative with the verb, to be, only substituting the particular verb for the syllable -li-.

[he] who loves, appendaye.
[they] who love, wapendao.
PRONOUNS.

[the tree] which falls, uangukao.
[trees] which grow, imeayo.
[the house] which falls, yangukayo.
[houses] which fall, ziangukuzo.

Where the relative is the object of the verb the same form may be used, only introducing the objective prefix proper to the substantive referred to, and changing the personal prefix.

[fruit] which I love, nilipendalo. -li- and -lo- being the syllables appropriate to tunda, a fruit, and other nouns of the Fifth Class.

When taken to pieces the word is seen to be, ni-, I, -li-, it, -penda-, love, -lo, which.

Relatives are rarely used in Swahili with any tenses except the present imperfect (the -na- tense), the past perfect (the -li- tense), and a peculiar form of the future (the -taka- tense). The following instances will show the way in which the relative is expressed with these several tenses both as subject and object.

| Class | I. [the man] | who is coming, ana-ye-kuja. |
|       |   "      | who came, ali-ye-kuja.      |
|       |   "      | who will come, atuka-ye-kuja. |
|       |   "      | whom he is striking, ana-ye-mpiga. |
|       |   "      | whom we loved, tuli-ye-mpenda. |
|       | [the men] | who will beat us, wataka-o-tupiga. |
|       |   "      | whom we will beat, tutaka-o-wapiga. |
|       | [the ox] | which is eating, ana-ye-kula. |
|       |   "      | which we shall eat, tutaka-ye-mla. |
| II.  | [the tree] | which fell, uli-o-anguka. |
|      |   "      | which he cut down, ali-o-ukata. |
|      | [the trees] | which were visible, ili-yo-onekana. |
|      |   "      | which we saw, tuli-yo-iona. |
| III  | [the house] | which fell down, ili-yo-anguka. |
|      |   "      | which I bought, nili-yo-inunua. |
The particles of place and time, mo, po, ko, are treated as relative particles.

alimo, where he is (within).
alipo, where he is (if near).
aliko, where he is (far off).
anapokwenda, when he is going.
anakokwenda, whither he is going.
alimokwenda, wherein he went.
alipokwenda, when he went.
alikokwenda, whither he went.

There is one ambiguity which cannot be avoided where both subject and object are of the same class. Aliyempiga may mean, who beat him, or, whom he beat; kilichokikata may mean, which cut it, or, which it cut, supposing kisu, a knife, to be one substantive, and kitu, a thing, to be the other.

The negative is combined with the relative by the use of -si-. There is but one negative tense, and it embraces all times, past, present, and future.

asiye, [he] who is not, who will not be, who was not.
usianguka, [the tree] which falls not, which is not falling, which did not fall, or, which will not fall.
nischokupa, [the knife] which I did not give you, do not give you, or, shall not give you.

Where the relative is used in English with a preposition, the relative particle is sometimes joined with the verb and also with the preposition; but more commonly, the force of the preposition being contained in that of the Swahili verb, no special form is required. See Derivative Verbs, p. 157.

The man whom I went with, mtu nali-o-kwenda naye.
The man I went to, mtu nali-o-mwendea.
Where I came from, nili-po-toka.
Where I am going to, nina-ko-kwenda.

As the Swahili has no proper word for to have, but uses for it kuwa na, to be with, cases of double relatives are very frequent where having is mentioned.

The knife I have, kisu nilicho nacho.
The houses you have, nyumba ulizo nazo.
The knife I had, kisu nilichokuwa nacho.
The houses you had, nyumba ulizokuwa nazo.

The relative is used in some cases in which it is not employed in English.

Who went by? Nani ali-ye-pita (who is he who passed)?
He likes this fruit, tunda hili ndilo alipendalo (this fruit is it which he likes).
The boy is going, kijana aendao.
Whosoever may come, yee yote atakayekuja.

There is another way of expressing the relative by means of ambaye or ambaye kwamba, though not used in Zanzibar. When it is employed the final syllable of ambaye changes according to the rules given above, making ambao, ambazo, ambacho, ambavyo, &c.

Sometimes an English relative can be expressed by the use of mwenyi, &c., having.

The man whose house it is, mtu mwenyi nyumba.

INTERROGATIVE AND OTHER PRONOUNS.

There are four Interrogatives which are not variable.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lini?</td>
<td>When?</td>
<td>Gani?</td>
<td>What sort?</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Gani always follows the substantive it is connected with.

Mt u gani? What man? What sort of man?

Kitu gani? What thing? What sort of thing?

What? is sometimes expressed by the syllable -ni suffixed to a verb.

Atapatani? What will he get?

Amefanyani? What has he done?

Kunani? What is there? What is the matter?

Kina nini? What has it? What is the matter with it?

Wanani? What have they? What are they at?

What o'clock is it? is rendered by Saa ngapi? How many hours?

The interrogative Which? is expressed by -pi preceded by the appropriate syllable, which is the same as that used as the subjective personal prefix to verbs. It always follows the noun it refers to.
The Interrogative, if followed by a verb, requires a relative with it.

Mtumyupi apendaye kwenda? Which [or what] man likes to go?
Nyumba iipi ikupendesayo? Which house do you like?

Nani? who? is also generally followed by a relative.

Nani aliopo mlango? Who is at the door?

It is, however, allowable to say nani yupo mlango, which is a literal translation of the English.

The interrogative Where? is wapi? or api?

Wenda wapi? Where are you going?

When referring to a substantive wapi must always be preceded by the syllable which is the proper subjective personal prefix for that substantive. This prefix very probably represents the substantive verb, and may often be translated by is it? or are they?

A fuller form to represent where is it? or where are they? is made by adding -ko to the personal prefix.

Yuko wapi? Where is he? Ziko wapi? Where are they?
The noun referred to follows this interrogative.

I wapi merihebu? Where is the ship?

How? is expressed by the syllable -je suffixed to the verb.

Nitakiptaja? How shall I get it?
Chalifanywaje? How was it made?
Ulipendaje, ao kupika, ao bichi? How do you like it, cooked or raw?
Asemaje? [How does he talk?] What does he say?
Urefu wake yapataje? How long is it?
Umri wake apataje? How old is he?
Kwenda chini kwake chapataje [kisima]? How deep is it [a well]?

The use of kupata, to get, in these phrases must be noticed. There is no direct way of attaching the how? to the adjective; they say therefore, "His age, how gets he it?"

How many? is expressed by -ngapi, which is treated as an adjective.

The exclamatory What! is rendered by the interrogative pronoun in -pi.

Furaha ipi! What joy!
VERBS.

Regular Swahili verbs always end in -a, as, kupenda, to love, kupiga, to beat.

Verbs derived from the Arabic may end in -e, -i, or -u, as, kusamehe, to pardon, kusafiri, to travel, kuharibu, to destroy. Verbs in this form do not change the final vowel, where verbs in -a regularly do so.

The simplest form of the verb is used in Swahili, as in English, for the second person singular of the imperative.

- Penda! Love!
- Piga! Strike!
- Samehe! Pardon!
- Safiri! Travel!
- Haribu! Destroy!

The second-person plural imperative is made by adding -ni. All the other tenses and moods are made by prefixing syllables to the simple form, except that verbs in -a change -a into -e in the present subjunctive, and into -i in the present negative, and a -w- is inserted to mark the passive.

There is a negative as well as an affirmative conjugation, in which the tenses and persons are also distinguished by prefixes.

The various prefixes form in pronunciation one word with the verb, and when taken to pieces denote its person, number, tense, mood, subject, and object.

Amekwambia = A-me-kw-ambia = He-has-you-tell = He has told you.
Waliponipenda = Wa-li-po-ni-penda = They-did-when-me-love = When they loved me.
Nitakachokupa = Ni-taka-cho-ku-pa = I-shall-which-you-give-to = Which I shall give to you.
Ningalimwona = Ni-ngali-mw-ona = I-should-have-him-see = I should have seen him.

The syllables used as prefixes have not the same meaning standing separately as they have when combined with the verb in their proper order; for this reason, therefore, as well as to show the proper pronunciation, they with the verb must all be written as one word.

Lists of the several prefixes will be found at the end of the preliminary observations to the second part of this handbook (p. 237). The personal prefixes will be found described under Pronouns (p. 104), and seen arranged under their appropriate classes of Substantives in the Table of Concdords, p. 82.

Indefinite Tenses.

1. Customary actions are expressed by prefixing hu- to the verb. In this form there is no distinction of number, person, or time.

Hu-endá, one goes, they go, everybody goes, he used to go.
Hu-penda, one likes, they like, one would like.

2. The relative may be joined with the verb without any sign of time. The personal prefix only is put before the verb, and the relative sign suffixed to it.

Where the relative is the object of the verb, it is expressed as in the affirmative tenses, by the form of the relative particle and the insertion of the objective prefix.

Ni-si-zo-zi-penda, which I do not like.

This negative tense may be applied with equal propriety to past, present, or future time, amounting in effect to a negative of the relation at the time and under the circumstances implied in the context.

The application of the relative to the definite affirmative tenses is explained under Pronouns (p. 119).

The difference between—which I like—and—I who like it—is to be found in the form of the relative particle.
VERBS.

[Nyumba] nili-yo-ipenda, [the house] which I liked.
   nili-ye-ipenda, I who liked it.
[Kitu] nili-cho-hipenda, [the thing] which I liked.
   nili-ye-hipenda, I who liked it.

Definite Tenses.

The important part of each tense is the tense prefix. It is preceded by the personal sign of the subject, and may be followed directly by the verb. If any signs of relation are used they are suffixed to the tense prefix, and the objective prefix (if any) must always immediately precede the verb. The tense prefix is the same for all persons and both numbers. The personal prefix is the same for all tenses, except the slight changes dependent upon the question whether the first letter of the tense prefix is a vowel or not.

In order therefore to construct the proper form of verb, it is necessary first to ascertain the proper personal prefix, next the proper tense prefix, then the particles of relation and objective prefix, if they are required, and then to finish with the verb. Thus, to say, A house has fallen down. A house is nyumba, a word of the third class; the proper personal prefix for a singular noun of the third class is -i, the tense prefix for the present perfect is -me-, the verb to fall is ku-anguka (the ku- being the sign of the infinitive; we have therefore—

Nyumba imeanguka = a house has fallen down.

If we wished to say, Six houses have fallen down; we find that nyumba being of the third class keeps the same form in the plural; sita is six, and must follow its noun; the subjective prefix proper to plural nouns in the third class is zi-; the tense prefix and the verb remain the same.

Nyumba sita zimeunguka, six houses have fallen down.

To take one more complicated example, I saw the knife, which you gave him. The personal prefix for the first person is ni- or n-, the tense prefix of the past perfect is -ali-, to see is ku-ona, knife is kisu, a substantive of the fourth class. As some particular knife is intended we must use the objective prefix, and that for a singular substantive of the fourth class is -ki-. As the tense prefix begins with a vowel we must use the personal prefix which ends in a consonant. We have therefore—

Nalikiona kisu = I saw the knife.

‘Which you gave him.’ The relative referring to a singular noun of the fourth class is -cho-. It must follow the tense prefix, which is -ali-, as before, for the past perfect. The sign of the second person singular is u- or w-; the verb, to give to, is ku-pa. The object of the verb is him, the objective prefix for nouns of the first class is -mu- or -m-. Putting these together we have,

Which you gave him, walichompa.

And the whole sentence,

I saw the knife which you gave him, nalikiona kisu walichompa.

It must not be forgotten that ku- and pa- may be used for there in an impersonal sense.

Kulikuwa or Palikuwa, there was or there were.
Kukapiga, &c., and there struck, &c.

INDICATIVE TENSES.—PRESENT.

There are in the language of Zanzibar two Presents, one Indefinite and one Imperfect.

1. The Indefinite Present answers to our common English present, I come, I love, &c. It is made by prefixing -a- to the verb.

   \begin{align*}
   &\text{N-} &\text{I love.} \\
   &\text{W-} &\text{Thou lovest.} \\
   &\quad \quad \quad \text{He or she} \\
   &\text{W-, Y-, Ch-, L-, W-, P-, Kw-} &\text{loves.} \\
   &\quad \quad \quad \text{It loves.} \\
   &\text{Tw-} &\text{We love.} \\
   &\text{Mu-} &\text{You love.} \\
   &\text{W-} &\text{They love.} \\
   &\text{Y-, Z-, V\text{-}, Y-, Z-} & \end{align*}

2. The Present Imperfect answers to our tense with am, I am coming, I am loving, &c. It is made by prefixing -na- to the verb.

   \begin{align*}
   &\text{N\text{-}, U-} &\text{I am} \\
   &\quad \quad \quad \text{Thou art} \\
   &\text{A-, U-, I-, Ki-, Li-, U-} &\text{He, she,} \\ &\quad \quad \quad \text{or it is} \\ &\text{Pa-, Ku-} &\text{loving.} \\ &\quad \quad \quad \text{We are} \\ &\text{Tu-} &\text{You are} \\ &\text{'M-} &\text{They are} \\ &\text{Wa-, I-, Zi-, Vi-, Ya-, Zi-} &
   \end{align*}
   \]

   In the first person the ni- is often contracted into 'n-, and sometimes altogether omitted. This tense used after another verb may be translated by an English present participle.

   Namwona, or Nalimwona anakuja, I see him, or, I saw him coming.

   In the dialect of Mombas this -na- tense is used of past time. In Zanzibar it is the more usual form of the present.
Present Perfect.

The Present Perfect is made by the prefix -me-: it denotes an action complete at the time of speaking, and therefore answers to the English tense with have.

In verbs denoting a state or the possession of a quality the present has the meaning of to enter upon, to acquire, or to become, what the verb denotes. The -me- tense must then be translated by to have, or to be, &c. (p. 86).

Inajaa, it is getting full.
Imejaa, it is full.
Inapasuka, it is being torn.
Imepasuka, it is torn.
Inapotea, it is becoming lost.
Imepotea, it is lost.
Anavaa, he is putting on.
Amevaa, he has put on, therefore, he wears.

When the -me- tense occurs in a narrative, it denotes an action complete at the time referred to, and must generally be translated by had.

Nikamwona ameufungua mlango, and I saw that he had unfastened the door.

The -me- tense may sometimes be translated as a past participle, signifying a state arrived at at the time of speaking or at the time referred to.

Yu hayi ao amekufa? Is he alive or dead? Zalikuwa zimepotea, they were lost.

In this sense it may be used to form compound tenses, somewhat as the past participle is in English.

In some dialects of Swahili the prefix is pronounced -ma- rather than -me- See the end of Appendix II.

Past Perfect.

The Past Perfect tense is made by the prefix -li- or -ali-: it denotes an action complete in past time. It must sometimes be translated in English by the tense with had, but more commonly it represents the indefinite past, which usually ends in -ed.

When it is intended to denote the action as a continuous one, the syllable -ki- may be inserted after the tense prefix.

N-ali-ki-mpenda, I loved him [not once but continuously].
W-ali-papendana, when they loved one another.
W-ali-po-ki-pendana, while they loved one another.

Narrative Past.

In telling a story it is usual to begin with one verb in the -li- tense, and then to put all that follow in a tense made by the prefix -ka-. This tense includes in itself the power of the conjunction and. It can never properly stand at the beginning of a narrative, but no other past tense can properly be used for any verb except the first. It may occasionally be used after another verb, where the time being indefinite would, in English, be represented by a present.

\end{align*}

Nika- is frequently contracted into Ha.

Hamwona = Nikamwona = And I saw him.

The -ka- of this tense is often pronounced -ki- in rapid or careless talking.
VERBS.

FUTURE.

The Future Tense is made by the prefix -ta-.

\begin{array}{c|c}
Ni- & I shall \\
U- & Thou wilt \\
A- & He or she will \\
U-, I-, Ki- & It will \\
Li-, Pa-, Ku- & We shall \\ Tu- & You will \\
M- & They will \\
Wa- & \\
I-, Zi-, Vi-, Ya- & ta-penda love.
\end{array}

In the first person the prefix Ni- is often omitted.

\[Tapenda = Nitapenda = I shall love.\]

When particles of relation are introduced the prefix -ta- is very rarely used; the tense prefix stands almost always as -taka-.

\[Atakayekuja, [he] who will come.\]

With particles of relation the difference between the present, indefinite, and future times is much more carefully observed in Swahili than in English.

\[Nilalapo, when I sleep, i.e., in the case of my sleeping.\]
\[Ninapolala, when I sleep, i.e., at the time when I am sleeping.\]
\[Nitakapolala, when I sleep, i.e., when I shall be sleeping.\]
\[Mtu aendaye, the man who goes (at any time).\]
\[Mtu anayekwenda, the man who is going (now).\]
\[Mtu atakayekwenda, the man who goes (at some future time).\]

Thus, if it is intended to send a man somewhere and pay him afterwards for his trouble, where it might be said in English—Tell the man who goes that I will pay him when he comes back—the Swahili verbs must all be in the future, \[Mwambie yule atakayekwenda kwamba\] atakaporudi nitamlipia. Where it is the fact and not the time, person, or thing, that is the important element of the idea, it is better not to use the particles of relation, but to employ the -ki- tense, which see.

Conditional Tenses.

There are four tenses which may be called Conditional. The first, made with -ki-, expresses a state of things as supposed to be existing. The second, made with -japo-, expresses a state of things supposed as possible. The other two refer to contingencies; one of them, made with -nge- or -nga-, expresses what would now be happening, and the contingency on which it would depend regarded as existing; the other, made with -ngali-, expresses what would have happened, and the contingency on which it would have depended regarded as no longer existing.

Actual Conditional or Participial Tense.

This tense is made with the prefix -ki-, and may be translated by the English present participle, or by as, if, when, since, though, or any other words by which the idea of a state of things can be introduced and connected with the rest of the sentence.

\begin{array}{c}
\text{Ni-} \\
\text{U-} \\
\text{A-} \\
\text{U-, I-, Ki-} \\
\text{Li-, Pa-, Ku-} \\
\text{Tu-} \\
\text{M-} \\
\text{Wa-} \\
\text{I- Zi- Vi- Ya} \\
\end{array}
\Rightarrow
\begin{array}{c}
\text{ki-penda} \\
\text{I} \\ \text{Thou} \\
\text{He or she} \\ \text{It} \\
\text{We} \\ \text{You} \\
\text{They} \\ \end{array}
\Rightarrow
\text{loving.}
The prefix Niki- may be contracted into Hi.-

\[Hi\text{-}fukuza = Niki\text{-}fukuza = As I was driving.\]

Viewed as a present participle, the -ki- tense can be used to form compound tenses, especially a past imperfect.

Alikuwa akiogolea, he was swimming about.

The following are a few examples of the use of this tense:

- Nitafulahi nikihuona, [seeing you I shall rejoice] I shall be glad to see you.
- Nikiwa nacho, [I having it] If I have it—when I have it—if I should have it—in case of my having it—since I have it.
- Alipotea akizunguka kwa siku mbili, [He was lost wandering for two days] He lost his way and wandered about for two days.
- Upeto ukiwa moto hutana, [Air being hot] Air expands when it becomes heated.
- Akisema kveli, hasadikiwot, [Telling the truth, he is not believed] If he should tell the truth, he would not be believed.

In this instance the use of the -ki- tense and of the negative present are both remarkable. It will be seen, however, upon examination, that there is no real contingency in such a sentence as this. It affirms a fact in a state of things, not a contingency upon a supposed state of things; it is not his telling the truth which prevents his being believed.

A corresponding past tense may be made by the -lu- tense with the relative particle -po-

Walipopenda, when they loved, being that they then loved.
Possible Conditional.

This tense is made by the prefix -japo-, and puts a case; it generally implies that the case is an extreme or unlikely one. It may be translated by even if.

\begin{align*}
\text{Ni-} & \quad (I) \\
\text{U-} & \quad \text{thou} \\
\text{A-} & \quad \text{he or she} \\ \text{U-, I-, Ki-} & \quad \text{it} \\
\text{Li-, Pa-, Ku-} & \quad \text{we} \\ \text{Tu-} & \quad \text{you} \\
\text{M-} & \quad \text{they} \\
\text{Wa-} & \\
\text{I-, ZI-, VI-, Ya-} & \quad \text{love}.
\end{align*}

The prefix seems to be formed from kuja, to come, and -po, the particle denoting when or where; so that ujapo may be translated, When you come, and so with the other persons; this will give the force of the tense.

Wajapokupiga, when they come to beating you, i.e., even if they beat you.

Japo with the personal signs may be used alone in the sense of—even if.

\begin{align*}
\text{Ujapo lukioni, even if you do not see it.}
\end{align*}

Present Contingent.

This tense is formed by the prefix -nge- or -nga-, and puts a condition and its results as present. It necessarily implies that neither are in existence.

\begin{align*}
\text{Ni-} & \quad \text{I should, or if I did} \\
\text{U-} & \quad \text{Thou wouldest, or if thou didst} \\
\text{A-} & \quad \text{He, she, or it would, or if he, she, or it did} \\
\text{U-, I-, Ki-} & \quad \text{We should, or if we did} \\
\text{Li-, Pa-, Ku-} & \quad \text{You would, or if you did} \\
\text{Tu-} & \quad \text{They would, or if they did} \\
\text{M-} & \\
\text{Wa-} & \\
\text{I-, ZI-, VI-, Ya-} & \quad \text{love.}
\end{align*}
The -nga- form is used with monosyllabic verbs—angawa—though he be, or he would be.

The two branches of the contingency cannot in English be represented by the same tense, as they are in Swahili. The pair would stand in English, (1) If I did—(2) I should, &c. (1) If it were—(2) it would be, &c. Or they might stand, (1) Though I did—(2) yet I should, &c.

The second branch is sometimes represented in English by a past tense; sometimes both are.

Kama ungekuwa na akili, mali yako ungedumu nayo, [If you were with wits, your property you would continue with it]
If you were a man of understanding, your property would be (or would have been) yours still.

Past Contingent.

This tense is made with the prefix -ngali-. It supposes something at a past time, and concludes that something else would then have happened, also at a past time. It represents the English—If this had happened; that would have happened. It supposes that neither condition nor contingency did ever in fact occur. In English a past tense is often used to express a present contingency, but the Swahili seem to distinguish them more carefully.

\begin{align*}
\text{Ni-} & \quad
\begin{cases}
\text{Had I, or I should have} \\ \text{Hadst thou, or thou wouldest have} \\ \text{Had he, she, or it, or he, she, or it would have} \\ \text{Had we, or we should have loved.} \\
\text{Had you, or you would have} \\ \text{Had they, or they would have} \end{cases} \\
\text{U-} & \\
\text{A-} & \\
\text{U-, I-, Ki-} & \\
\text{Li-, Pa-, Ku-} & \\
\text{Tu-} & \\
\text{M-} & \\
\text{Wa-} & \\
\text{I-, Zi-, Vi-, Ya-} &
\end{align*}
There is always an accent on the personal prefix and none on the tense prefix, thus úngalikuja, úngalióna, &c.

Kama ungalikuwapo hapa, ndugu yangu angalipona, If you had been here, my brother would have got well.

The Imperative.

It has been mentioned above that the simplest form of the verb may be used for the Imperative as in English. The final letter of verbs in -a is frequently changed into e-. The plural is made by adding -ni.

- Penda, or Pende, love thou.
  Pendani, or Pendeni, love ye.
- Twaa, or Tvaee, take thou.
  Twaaani, or Tvaeni, take ye.
- Sifu, praise thou.
  Sifuni, praise ye.
- Fikiri, consider thou.
  Fikirini, consider ye.

The form ending in -e is the more commonly used in Zanzibar. The other persons are supplied by the use of the Subjunctive.

- Ka- may be prefixed to the Imperative to connect it with a preceding verb.

  Kajiificheni, and hide yourselves.

The Subjunctive.

The Subjunctive is made by prefixing the personal sign, and when the verb ends in -a changing that letter into -e. It may be translated into a variety of English forms. It may be used as an imperative or jussive, and is the only form that can be so used in the first and third persons.

- Nipende, let me love.

When used with an interrogative it may be translated —am I to—is he to, &c.

Nifanyeje? What am I to do?
It is the proper form to express purpose or object—that I may, &c.—and must be used in many cases where in English the infinitive is employed.

Mwambie akusayidie, tell him to help you, or speak to him that he may help you.

Where no purpose is implied the infinitive is used as in English.

I want to sleep, nataka kulala.

The force of the conjunction and may be expressed by inserting -ka- after the personal prefix. And is used in English in many cases where the second action is more or less the object with which the first is to be done, as in—try and find, &c. In such cases -ka- must not be used, but only the subjunctive in its simple form.

Verbs which end in -i, -e, or -u, keep the same final letter in the subjunctive.

The Infinitive.

The Infinitive is made in all cases by prefixing -ku.

Ku-penda, to love.
Ku-ona, to see.
The -u- becomes -w- before a, e, and i, and often disappears before o.

Kw-amba, to tell.
Kw-enda, to go.
Kw-isha, to finish.
Ko-aga, to bathe.

The Infinitive may always be used to express the action denoted by the verb.

Kwenda, going.
Kufa, dying.
Kupendana, mutual loving.

[There are two idiomatic uses of the Infinitive Mood, which are common, and may be mentioned here, the one a logical, the other a grammatical, contrivance.

Any finite form of a verb may be preceded by the infinitive of the same verb, the effect being rather to particularize and give prominence to the idea conveyed by the verb, than to emphasize the mode of an action.

Thus kufa utakufa, as to dying, you will die. Dying, that is what will happen to you. Not, you will certainly die.

Again, when any finite form of the verb, and especially a long form, would be closely followed by another verb in the same form, connected with the former verb by (at most) the simple copula 'na,' the second verb may be put in the infinitive mood. By this device the cumbrous repetition of a series of personal and other prefixes in a number of successive verbs is neatly avoided.

Thus, "anayeabudiwa na kutukuzwa," for anayetukuzwa, "who is worshipped and glorified."—A. C. M.]
PARTICIPLES.

There are properly no Participles in Swahili. The present participle in -ing may be represented by the -ana- tense of an incomplete action, by the -ki- tense of a state of continued action, or by the use of the relative.

The man sitting yonder, mtu akaaye hule.

The past participle may be represented by the -me- tense of a completed action, or by the relative when used adjectivally.

_Nimekiona kisu kilichopotea_, I have found the lost knife.

THE NEGATIVE CONJUGATION.

All Swahili verbs may be employed with negative prefixes to denote the reverse of their affirmative meaning. It must be observed that the negative forms do not simply deny the affirmative forms but rather reverse them.

- Napenda kwenda, I like going.
- Nataka kwenda, I want to go.
- Sipendi kwenda, I dislike going.
- Sitaki kwenda, I want not to go.

In English _I do not want_ is not so strong as _I do not like_, but in Swahili _sitaki_ is stronger than _sipendi_.

The negative tenses are formed by negative personal prefixes, which, except in the first person singular, are made from the affirmative forms by prefixing _ha_-.

For the negative combined with the relative, see p. 120.
Negative Present.

In this tense verbs ending in -a change that letter into -i; other final letters remain unchanged.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Si-</th>
<th>Hu-</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ha-, Hau-, Hai-</td>
<td>Haku-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Haki-, Hali-, Hapa-</td>
<td>Hatu-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ham-</td>
<td>Hawa-, Hai-, Hazi-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Havi-, Haya-</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

This tense is a more general negative than the English do not tense. It is used for both past and future wherever the negative depends upon some cause which is not affected by the time referred to.

The -i of si- in this and other tenses often disappears before a vowel.

Sogopi, I do not fear.

Negative Past.

There is one negative form referring to past time generally; it is made by the negative prefixes followed by -ku-.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Si-</th>
<th>Hu-</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ha-, Hau-, Hai-</td>
<td>Haku-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Haki-, Hali-</td>
<td>Hatu-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ham-</td>
<td>Hawa-, Hai-, Hazi-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Havi-, Haya-</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

In a few rare instances negative prefixes may be followed by -me- or -li-.

Simekuwa mwongo? Have I not become a liar?
The not yet Tense.

There is a negative tense made by the use of the negative prefixes followed by -ja-, which is a sort of negative present perfect, denying the action up to the time of speaking.

\begin{array}{c|c}
\text{Verbs} & \text{Negative Perfect} \\
\hline
\text{Si-} & \text{ja-penda} \\
\text{Hu-} & \text{I have not yet loved.} \\
\text{Ha-, Hau-, Hai-} & \text{Thou have not yet loved.} \\
\text{Haki-, Hali-} & \text{He or she have not yet loved.} \\
\text{Hapa-, Haku-} & \text{It have not yet loved.} \\
\text{Hatu-} & \text{We have not yet loved.} \\
\text{Ham-} & \text{You have not yet loved.} \\
\text{Hava-, Hai-, Hazi-} & \text{They have not yet loved.} \\
\text{Havi-, Haya-} & \\
\end{array}

The word bado is often used with this tense where it is intended rather to imply that what has not yet happened will some day come to pass.

Hajaja, he is not yet come, he is not come even now.
Hajaja bado, he is not come, at least not yet.

The -a- of -ja- coalesces with i and e into a long e sound.

Hajesha = Hajaisha = He has not yet finished.

Negative Future.

The negative future is made from the affirmative future by merely using negative instead of affirmative personal prefixes.

\begin{array}{c|c}
\text{Verbs} & \text{Future} \\
\hline
\text{Si-} & \text{ta-penda} \\
\text{Hu-} & \\
\text{Ha-, Hau-, Hai-} & \text{I shall not love.} \\
\text{Haki-, Hali-} & \text{Thou wilt not love.} \\
\text{Hapa-, Haku-} & \text{He, she, or it will not love.} \\
\text{Hatu-} & \text{We shall not love.} \\
\text{Ham-} & \text{You will not love.} \\
\text{Hava-, Hai-, Hazi-} & \text{They will not love.} \\
\text{Havi-, Haya-} & \\
\end{array}
Conditional Tenses.

The case of not being or not doing is put by a tense formed by the affirmative prefixes followed by -sipo-; it may be translated by the present participle with a negative, or by as, if, when, though, since, or any other word by which the case of not being, having, or doing, may be introduced.

\begin{array}{c|c|c}
\text{Ni-} & \text{I} \\
\text{U-} & \text{Thou} \\
\text{A-, U-, I, Ki-} & \text{He or she} \\ \text{Li-, Pa-, Ku-} & \text{It} \\
\text{Tu-} & \text{We} \\ \text{M-} & \text{You} \\
\text{Wa-, I, Zi-, Vi-} & \text{They} \\ \text{Ya} & \text{not loving.} \\
\end{array}

This tense may be also used to translate an English affirmative preceded by except or unless.

Asipojua, unless he knows.
Asipokuwa Abdallah, except Abdallah.

Contingent Tenses.

The negative contingent tenses, present and past, are made from the affirmative forms by merely using negative instead of affirmative personal prefixes.

\begin{array}{c|c|c|c}
\text{Si-} & \text{Did I or I should} \\
\text{Hu-} & \text{Didst thou or Thou wouldest} \\
\text{Ha-, Hau-, Hati-} & \text{Did he, she, or it, or He, she, or it would} \\ \text{Haki-, Hali-} & \text{Did we or We should} \\ \text{Hapa-, Haku-} & \text{Did you or you would} \\ \text{Hat-} & \text{Did they or They would} \\ \text{Ham-} & \text{not love} \\
\text{Hawa-, Hati-, Hazi-} & \text{nge-penda} \\
\text{Havi-, Haya-} & \text{not love} \\
\end{array}
NEGATIVE IMPERATIVE.

The negative imperative is made by the use of si (not), with the affirmative forms.

Si penda, love not. Si pendeni, love ye not.
Si sifu, praise not. Si sifuni, praise ye not.

The negative subjunctive is more often used in this sense than the imperative form.

NEGATIVE SUBJUNCTIVE.

The negative subjunctive is made from the affirmative form by inserting -si- between the affirmative personal prefix and the verb.

| Si-       | Had I or I should have          |
| Hu-       | Hadst thou or Thou wouldest have |
| Ha-, Hau-, Hai- | Had he, she, or it, or He, she, or it would have |
| Haki-, Hali-    | Had we or We should have        |
| Hapa-, Haku-, Hatu- | Had you or You would have       |
| Ham-       | Had they or They would have    | ngali-penda {not loved.}

The -i of -si- often disappears before a vowel.

asende, that he may not go.

The negative subjunctive may be Englished in several different ways. It may be used as above of a purpose not to do, or it may be used of a purpose to do which fails.

Akamtafuta asimwone, he looked for him, but did not see him or, without seeing him.

This form is commonly used for the negative imperative.

Nisende, let me not go. Usende, don't go.

A form of subjunctive connected with the not yet tense is made by the use of -sije- with the affirmative prefixes.

\begin{align*} Ni- & \\
U- & \\
A-, U-, I- & \\
Ki-, Li- & \\
Pa-, Ku-, & sije-penda, That \\ Tu- & \\
M- & \\
Wa-, I-, Zi- & \\
Vi-, Va- & \\
\end{align*}

\begin{align*} \text{I may} & \\
\text{thou mayest} & \\
\text{he, she, or it} & \\
\text{may} & \\ \text{we may} & \\ \text{you may} & \\ \text{they may} & \\ \text{not have already} & \\ \text{loved.} & \\
\end{align*}
\]

This tense may often be translated by before.

Utampata asijelala, you will catch him before he goes to sleep.

-sije with the personal prefixes may be used as a complete word followed by the -ka- tense.

Nisije nikafa, that I may not be already dead, or, that I may not die before, &c.
NEGATIVE INFINITIVE.

The negative infinitive is made by the use of kutoa (to put out), often contracted into kuto- and used as a prefix.

Kutoa kupenda, or Kutopenda, not to love, or not loving, to dislike, or disliking.

THE PASSIVE VOICE.

The Passive is made from the Active by merely inserting -w- before the final vowel.

- Napenda, I love.
  Napendwa, I am loved.
- Sipendi, I do not love.
  Sipendwi, I am not loved.
- Ninependa, I have loved.
  Ninependwa, I have been loved.
- Kupenda, to love.
  Kupendwa, to be loved.

Verbs ending in two vowels often use the passive of their applied form. See pp. 151, 161.

The Passive is used in a sort of impersonal way to denote what is intended to be done.

- Maji yamekwenda kuletwa, some one has gone to get water.
- Pesa zimekwenda kuvunjwa, some one has gone to get pice in exchange for silver.

AUXILIARY AND IRREGULAR VERBS.

As the Auxiliary verbs are mostly also irregular, it will be best to speak of their irregularities first, and afterwards of their use in making compound tenses.

Monosyllabic verbs and most dissyllabic words beginning with a vowel, retain the ku- of the infinitive in those tenses in which the tense prefix ends in a syllable incapable of bearing the accent. These tense prefixes are -na-, -ame-, -ali-, -ta-, -japo-, -nge-, -ngali-, and -sije-. The other prefixes, -a-, -ka-, -ki-, -nga-, -ku-, -ja-, -si-, are capable of bearing the accent, and the ku- is not retained when they are used. The personal signs, both subjective and objective, can bear the accent, the relative signs cannot.

Thus, from kuja, to come, we have:

Naja, I come. Ninakuja, I am coming.
Nikuja, and I came. Nimekuja, I have come.
Siji, I come not. Nitalikuja, I shall come.
Sikuja, I did not come. Nijapokuja, even if I come.
Sijaja, I am not yet come. Ningekuja, I should come.
Nisije, let me not come. Ningaliikuja, I should have come.
Nije, let me not come. Nisijeluja, before I come.
Ajaye, he who comes. Nisipokuja, when I come not.
Nijaye, I who come. Aliyekuja, he who came.

It is shown that this irregularity depends upon the power of certain syllables to support the accent by the changes which occur when an objective prefix is inserted.

Amekula, he has eaten.
Amé'ula, he has eaten him.

The verb kupa, to give to, is peculiar in always requiring an objective prefix, and therefore never having occasion to be irregular.

With dissyllables beginning with a vowel it is generally indifferent whether the ku- is retained or not.

Amekwisha or Ameisha, he has finished.
Amekwanza or Ameanza, he has begun.
Many verbs occur with or without a w-, which seems to be a relic of the -ku-.

Kuiva or Kuwiva, to ripen.
Kuaza or Kuwaza, to consider.

The word kuja, to come, stands alone in having an irregular imperative.

Njoo, come. Njooni, come ye.

Monosyllabic verbs and some dissyllables make their passives in a more or less irregular way. The following is a list of the monosyllabic verbs with their passives:

- 'Kucha, to fear. Kuchwa, to be feared.
- Kula, to eat. Kuliwa, to be eaten.
- Kunywa, to drink. Kunywewa, to be drunk.
- Kupa, to give to. Kupawa or Kupewa, to receive.

Kucha is used in the dialect of Lamoo for to fear, the word used at Zanzibar being kuogopa. Kucha means at Zanzibar to rise (of the sun), and kuchwa (or, in the dialect of Mombas, kutwa) means to set. The other monosyllabic verbs, kufa, to die, kuja, to come, kunya, to fall like rain, kuwa, to be, being neuters, do not make a passive.

Two dissyllabic verbs make their passive by merely adding -wa to the active form.

- Kuua, to kill. Kuuawa, to be killed.
- Kufua, to beat. Kufuawa, to be beaten.

Verbs ending in two vowels often insert an -I- in making their passive. See under Applied Forms, pp. 158-159.

- Kuzaa, to bear. Kuzawa or Kuzaliwa, to be born
- Kukomboa, to ransom. Kukombolewa, to be ransomed.
- Kufungua, to open. Kufungulica, to be opened.
The origin of this use lies probably in the difficulty of pronouncing distinctly the regular passive forms. Verbs ending in -e make their passive in -ewa.

Kusamehe, to pardon. Kusamehewa, to be pardoned.

Verbs ending in -i make their passives in -iwa.

Kukiri, to confess. Kukiriwa, to be confessed.

Verbs in -u generally make their passive in -iwa.

Kuharibu, to destroy. Kuharibiwa, to be destroyed.

Where the -u is preceded by a vowel the passive is made in -uliwa.

Kusahau, to forget. Kusahauliwa, to be forgotten.

The verb kuwa, to be, has several peculiarities. The Present tense is very seldom used in its regular form. For the Present tense ni (or, in the negative, si) may be used for all persons and both numbers, or the personal prefix appropriate to the subject of the verb may stand alone. Ni is apparently preferred where being is the important part of the idea; the personal prefix is used where the being of that particular thing is intended specially to be noticed. Yu (not A) is used for he or she is.

Si kuveli, ni kusifu tu, it is not true, it is only flattery. Tu tayari, we are ready.

When joined with a relative the regular form has the meaning of who may be.

A waye yote, whoever it be.

Where no stress is intended to be laid on the being, the verb to be, when joined with a relative pronoun is represented by the syllable -li-. See Relatives, p. 118. Li is used, though but rarely, with the personal signs to form a tense with the meaning—continuing to be. A narrative past is also formed with it in the sense of—I have continued to be.

_Nili hali ya kuwa juu yake_, I being on his back.
_Nikali nikipotea_, and I go on wandering.

In many cases where the verb to be is used in English merely to connect the parts of the sentence it is in Swahili omitted altogether.

*_Kwa nini weye kutoa kuonekana hizi siku nyingi?*_ why [have] you [been] invisible, i.e., Why have you kept out of sight so long?
*Yupi mikuu wao?*_ who [is] their chief?
Nyama ya kifaro ngumu mno, rhinoceros meat [is] very tough.

The Present Perfect has the meaning of _has become._

_Manenoye yamekuwa uwongo,* his words are become false.

The Past Perfect must be used to translate _was_ and _were._

_Nilipokuwa Sultani,* when I was Sultan.

The English _has_ or _have been_ must be translated by a present.

_Nipo hapa siku nyingi,* I have been here many days.

The Imperative is used with an _i_ prefixed.

_Iwe,* be thou.          _Iweni,* be ye.*

In the negative present and with relatives _si_ is used as _ni_ and _-li-_ are in the affirmative tense. The regular forms are also used, though but rarely.

* The subjunctive forms _uwe,* _mwe_ are commonly preferred in Zanzibar.—A. O. M.
The verb to be is used in English sometimes to denote existence viewed as an ultimate fact, sometimes to denote existence in place and time, sometimes to denote existence as the possessor of certain qualities, or the doer or sufferer of certain acts. In Swahili these three uses are distinguished by the employment of different forms.

The simple form of the verb is used only to denote existence as the possessor of qualities, or the doer or sufferer of acts.

Existence merely in place and time, whether the place and time are in English expressed or no, is denoted in Swahili by the addition to the verb of -po, -mo, or -ko, as the case may be. See Relatives, p. 120.

He is at my house, Yoku kwangu.
He is here, Yupo hapa.
He is in the house, Yumo nyumbani.
When he was here, Alipokuwapo hapa.
Where are they? Ziko wapi?

Existence viewed as a fact in itself is denoted by the addition of na to the verb, being the same form as is used for the verb to have. Na is joined to the personal prefixes to make the present tense, in all other tenses it is treated as a separate word, and has generally the appropriate relative sign suffixed to it.

Kuna mtu, there is a man.
Kulikuwa na mtu, there was a man.
Zinazo, they are.
Zilikuwa nazo, they were.

In Swahili there is properly no verb to have. They employ for it kuwa na, to be with.
Nina, I have.
Nalikuwa na, I had.
Nitakuwa na, I shall have.
Niwe na, that I may have.

Where the objective prefix would be used with an ordinary verb, the appropriate relative particle must be suffixed to the na as well as to the tense prefix.

Ninazo, I have them.
Aliyekuwa nazo, who had them.
Alizokuwa nazo, which he had.

Auxiliary Verbs.

The Verbs used as Auxiliaries are, kuwa, to be, kutoa, to take out, kuja, to come, kwisha, to come to an end.

Can is represented by the appropriate tenses of kuweza, to be able. Must is expressed by sharti, of necessity, or by the negative tenses of kuwa na buddi, to have an escape from.

Sina buddi, I must.
Asiwe na buddi, that he may be obliged.

After kuwa na buddi either the infinitive or subjunctive may be employed.

Ought may be represented by the tenses of kupasa, to concern, or, to come to concern. Should is expressed in the same way when it implies obligation, and by the contingent tenses when it expresses a contingency.

Imenipasa kwenda, it concerns me to go, i.e., I ought to go.
Imenipasa nisende, it concerns me that I go not, i.e., I ought not to go.

Kupasa is also used as follows:—

Haikuniposa mimi, it is no business of mine.
Imekupasani? What have you to do with it?
Ameniposa mimi, he is a connection of mine.
May and might may be represented by kuweza where they imply power, by halali, lawful, where they imply lawfulness, and by the subjunctive where they imply a purpose.

The use of kuja as an auxiliary has been mentioned under the -japo-, -ja-, and -sije- tenses, pp. 138, 145, 148.

Kutoa is used to convey a negation in cases where the regular negative tenses cannot conveniently be used.

With the infinitive it is frequently contracted into -to-, and used as a mere formative.

Kutoa kuja, or Kutokuja, not to come.
Kutoa kupenda, or Kutopenda, not to love.

The meaning of these negative infinitives may be given as, putting out coming, barring coming, coming not happening. A transitive form may be made by the use of kutosha, to make to go out.

Kutosha kumwuliza, to exclude asking him.

In many cases kutoa may be translated by, to forbear, or, to neglect.

Ametoa kuja, he has neglected coming, he has not come.
Nikitoa kuja, if I forbear from coming, or, so long as I do not come.

The negative tenses do not furnish a true present perfect. The past, hakuja, is, he did not come; the present, haji, implies rather that he never will, that coming is not to be predicated of him at all. The difference between nisipokuja and nikitoa kuja is represented in English by that between, if I come not, and, while I come not. In all cases the use of toa connects the negation with the tense only; the negative tenses imply that the opposite of the verb might be affirmed.

Kwisha may often be translated by already.

Amekwisha kuja, he has already come.
Nimekwisha kula, I have done eating.

It is used to strengthen the present perfect, conveying the meaning that something is not merely done, but fully done and over.

A somewhat similar effect is produced on the present by using katika kwisha.

Ni katika kwisha kula, I am finishing eating, I am just leaving off, I have very nearly done.

Kuwa, to be, is used in Swahili very much as it is in English, the -ki- and -me- tenses of the principal verb being used as present and past participles.

Nili nikienda, I continuing to be going.
Nikali nikienda, and I am still going.
Nikiwa nikienda, I being going, while going.
Nikiwa nimekwenda, I being gone, having gone.
Nikiwa nimekwisha kwenda, having already gone
Nalikuwa nikienda, I was going.
Nalikuwa nimekwenda, I was gone, I had gone.
Nalikuwa nimekwisha kwenda, I had already gone.
Nitakuwa nikienda, I shall be in the act of going.
Nitakuwa nimekwenda, I shall be gone.
Nitakuwa nimekwisha kwenda, I shall have already gone.
Nitakuwa niliokwenda, I shall be who has gone, I shall have gone, I shall have gone to or been at.

Kuwa na, to have, is not used as an auxiliary.

Derivative Verbs.

There are four derivative forms which may be constructed out of any Swahili verb, where in English we must use either another verb or some compound expression.

1. What may be called the applied form is used in cases where in English a preposition would be employed to connect the verb with its object. By the use of this form verbs which have things for their objects may be made to apply to persons.

This form is made by inserting i or e before the final -a of the simple verb. I is used when the vowel of the preceding syllable is a, i, or u. E is used when the vowel of the preceding syllable is e or o.

Kupa, to give to, having already an applied meaning, has no applied form. There is a difficulty in expressing what would have been the meaning of the simple form. Kutoa is used for to give, in the sense of parting with. Such expressions as, which was given you, must be rendered by a change of person—uliopewa, which you had given to you, or, which you received. Which he gave me, is very commonly rendered niliopewa naye.

Verbs ending in -i and -u make their applied forms in -ia.

Kufasiri, to explain. Kufasiria, to explain to.
Kuharibia, to destroy. Kuharibia, to destroy for.

The great paucity of prepositions in Swahili brings the applied forms of verbs into constant use. The only difficulty in their application lies in the exact discrimination of the meaning of the simple word. Many Swahili verbs imply in their simple form what can only be expressed in English by the use of a preposition. Whenever a really good dictionary shall have been compiled it will supply all the necessary information. The applied form may be rendered by inserting any preposition which will suit the context. Thus, kushuhudia is, to bear witness about, for, or against, as the case may be, and kunenea, which means to speak about, may have to be translated by, to recommend, or to decry, to scold, or to describe. The simple word nena has in itself the force of to mention, so that it is not necessary to use the applied form as a translation of to speak of, where it means no more than to mention.

Sometimes the shape of the word will be a useful reminder to foreigners of its exact meaning; thus, _kupotea_, which may be roughly translated _to lose_, is in the shape of an applied form, and really is one, its exact meaning being, to become lost to. If, therefore, we want to say, I have lost my knife, the construction must be altered into, my knife has become lost to me _(kisu changu kimenipotea)_ , the subject and object having to change places.

Where in English a preposition connected with the verb can stand by itself at the end of the sentence, the applied form must be used in Swahili.

_A knife to cut with, kisu cha kukatia._
_Stones to grind wheat with, mawe ye kusagia ngano._
_A place to come out at, mahali pa kutokea._
_A bag to put money in, mfuko wa kutilia fetha._

In these sentences the use of the possessive particle
_-a_ for the English _to_, denoting a purpose or employment, must be observed and remembered. This particle turns what follows into a sort of adjective in this, as in all other cases in which it is followed by a word which is capable of denoting a quality. It is somewhat like the English expressions, _a man of sense, a building of great solidity_, &c.

When an applied form is followed by _mbali_ it conveys the idea that as a consequence of the action denoted by the simple verb something is put out of the way, or got rid of.

_Afile, or Afile mbali, that he may die out of our way._
_Tumwulie mbali, let us kill him and done with it._
_Potelea mbali, perish out of my way = go and be hanged._

The passive of the applied form has a meaning which it requires some attention to remember and apply rightly, though it is strictly according to the rule that the object of the active becomes the subject of the passive voice.

Kuletea, to bring to.
Kuletewa, to have brought to one.
Kufanyia, to make for.
Kufanyiwa, to have made for one.

It is often difficult in English to express this passive without using an altogether different word. What suggests itself at first to an English ear, that the passive of to bring to would be to be brought to, is wrong, and must be carefully avoided. Sometimes a change of prepositions will suffice to render the passive correctly; kupa may be translated to present to, and then kupewa is not to be presented to, but to be presented with.

Passives made in -liwa and -lewa are used as the passives of both the simple and the applied form. Kufunguliwa may be used as the passive of kufungua, meaning, to be unfastened, or as the passive of kufungulia, meaning then, to have unfastened for one. It can never mean, to be unfastened for. If it is necessary to express a passive in that form it must be done by changing the construction.

A cry was made at him, alipigiwa ukelele [he had made at him a cry].
The door was opened for him, alifunguliwa mlango [he had opened for him the door].

2. The Causative form is made by changing the final -a into -sha or -za.

Kupungua, to grow less.
Kupunguza, to make to grow less.
Kuzidi, to grow greater.
Kuzidisha, to make greater.
When the final -a is preceded by a consonant the general rule is to use the applied form as the basis of the causative.

- Kupenda, to like.  Kupendeza, to please.
- Kufanya, to make.  Kufanyiza, to cause to make.
- Kupanda, to go up.  Kupandisha, to make to go up.

Verbs which end in the simple form in -ta end in the causative form in -sa.

- Kutakata, to be clean.  Kutakasa, to make clean.

Verbs which end in -ka may be turned into causatives by changing -ka into -sha.

- Kuwaka, to be on fire.  Kuwasha, to set on fire.
- Kulainika, to be soft.  Kulainisha, to make soft.
- Kutoka, to go out.  Kutosha, to make to go out.
- Kushuka, to go down.  Kushusha, to let down.

The causatives of verbs ending in -e, -i, or -u are constructed on the applied form.

- Kukaribu, to come near.  Kukaribisha, to make to come near.

3. The Neuter, or quasi passive form is made by changing the final -a into -ka.

- Kufungua, to unfasten.  Kufunguka, to be unfastened.
- Kuhooa, to save.  Kuhooha, to be saved.

Where the final -a is preceded by a consonant the neuter is constructed from the applied form.

- Kuvunja, to break.  Kuvunjika, to be broken.
- Kukata, to cut.  Kukatika, to be cut.
Verbs.

Causatives in -sha may be turned into neuters by changing -sha into -ka.

Kustusha, to startle. Kustuka, to be startled.

Verbs in -e, -i, and -u, construct their neuters on the applied forms.

Kusamehe, to forgive. Kusameheka, to be forgiven.
Kufasiri, to explain. Kufasiriika, to be explained.
Kuharibu, to destroy. Kuharibika, to be destroyed.

The -ka form is used (like the English passive) to denote what is generally done or doable.

Kulika, to be eaten, or, to be eatable.

4. Reciprocal forms are made by changing -a into -ana.

Kupenda, to love. Kupendana, to love one another.
Kupiga, to beat. Kupigana, to beat one another, to fight.

Verbs in -e, -i, and -u construct their reciprocals upon the applied forms.

Kukaribu, to come near. Kukaribiana, to come near to one another.

The reciprocal form of the -ka form may be translated by to be to be, &c.

Kupatikana, to be to be got.
Kujulikana, to be to be known, to be knowable
Kuoekana, to be to be seen, to be visible.

The derived forms are conjugated and treated in every way as though they were original words, and other derived forms may be made from them to any extent that may be required.
The applied form of an applied form generally signifies to do a thing to or for a person for a purpose. Doubling the verb gives an idea of thoroughness.

Kukata, to cut.
Kutafuta, to seek.
Kuchafuka, to be in a mess.
Kupasuka, to be torn.
Kukatika, to be cut.

Kukatakata, to cut up.
Kutafutatafuta, to seek all about.
Kuchafukachafuka, to be all in a mess.
Kupasukapasuka, to be torn to shreds.
Kukatikakatika, to be all cut about.
LIST OF VERBS.

As it is necessary to put to before the English Verb to make the Infinitive, so it is necessary to prefix ku- to make the Infinitive in Swahili. Before Monosyllabic Verbs the ku- bears the accent, and is retained in several of the tenses. See p. 149.

ADVERBS,
PREPOSITIONS AND CONJUNCTIONS.

Adverbs.
Adverbs in Swahili follow the words they qualify.

Sema sana, speak out.  Njema sana, very good.

Adjectives may be used as Adverbs by prefixing vi- or vy-.

Kunuka vibaya, to smell badly.

Verbs in the Infinitive and Substantives generally may be made to serve as Adverbs by the use of the Preposition kwa.

Kwa uwongo, falsely.  Kwa kujua, knowingly.

Many English Adverbs may be translated by sana (very), which intensifies the action or quality expressed by the word to which it is subjoined.

Vuta sana!  Pull hard!
Shika sana!  Hold tight!
Enda sana!  Go fast!

Prepositions.

There are in Swahili very few Prepositions. Indeed there are scarcely more than four, na, ya, kwa, and katika.
Katika has the same force as the case in -ni, it denotes locality in nearly every form in which locality can require to be expressed. Kwa denotes instrumentality and object. Na is and or with, and by of the agent after a passive Verb; in this last sense ni is used at Mombas and in other dialects. Ya, or rather -a with a variable initial letter, denotes possession; it is treated as a possessive pronoun, and changes its first letter according to the class of the noun which precedes it, that is of the person or thing possessed; it can very nearly always be translated by of. Its forms appropriate to each class of substantives are:

Class I. sing. wa, plur. wa.
   " II. " wa, " ya.
   " III. " ya, " za.
   " IV. " cha, " vya.

Class V. sing. la, plur. ya.
   " VI. " wa, " za.
   " VII. " pa, " pa.
   " VIII. " kwa, " kwa.

See p. 209 in original.

Many of our Prepositions are expressed by a Noun or Adverb followed by -a. Many others are expressed by Verbs in their simple or applied forms (p. 159). Some can scarcely be expressed at all. The Preposition from seems to be almost wholly wanting in Swahili. It is sometimes implied in the Verb, as in kutoka, to come or go from, or to come or go out of, but generally it is marked only by katika or the case in -ni, which denote merely the locality in which the action commenced. From, of time, may be translated by tangu, or by toka, or tokea, which do not seem to be used of space or derivation, but to be best translated by since or beginning from.
CONJUNCTIONS.

Until to, as far as, of time and space, are frequently translated by hatta, and (less elegantly) by mpaka, followed by a substantive.

Conjunctions are often dispensed with by the use of the tenses with -ka-. And, but, or any other mere connective in a narrative, is unnecessary where the -ka-tense is employed, as in all ordinary cases it must be. The Imperative and Subjunctive may also have -ka-prefixed with the force of the Conjunction and.

Katupa! And throw it away.
Enenda sokoni kaleta ndizi! Go to the market and fetch some bananas.
Uone, ukasadiki, that you may see and believe.

If and other Conjunctions introducing a state are generally expressed by using the -ki- tense of the Verb (see Verbs, p. 136).

In order that is generally expressed only by putting the Verb which expresses the purpose into the subjunctive.

INTERJECTIONS.

There are in Swahili, as in all languages, some scarcely articulate Interjections, and many of the natives, especially of the lower class, use a great deal of action, often joined with half-articulate exclamatory sounds, to illustrate and enforce their meaning. The following are the most usual Interjections, and those which can best be written. The words used for Yes and No are given in the preceding list, pp. 216 and 220.

The ordinary salutations are in practice a sort of Interjections, not being very easily explained under any other head.

A slave addressing a superior says Sikamoo or Nasikamoo, for nashika miguu, I embrace your feet. The superior replies Marahaba, thank you, or welcome, the word being originally an Arabic form of congratulation and well-wishing.

Equals very commonly say when they meet Jambo or Yambo, to which the reply is Jambo or Jambo sana. There is a playful or very affectionate way of continuing the dialogue thus—Jambo. Jambo. Jambo sana. Jambo sana. Sana sana. Sana sana. Kama lulu (like pearls). Kama marijanı (like coral), &c., &c. The more correct expressions are—\textit{Hu jambo?} Are you well? and the answer, \textit{Si jambo, I am well.} It is difficult to explain these phrases intelligibly. \textit{Hu jambo?} is literally, Are you not a matter or affair? or still more strictly, Are you not a word? The meaning is very nearly that of the English, Is nothing the matter with you? Sometimes \textit{Ha jambo} is used to express, He is well, or \textit{Ha jambo kidogo,} He is not very ill, or He is a little better. One may ask, \textit{U hali gani?} What state are you in? i.e., How are you? to which a proper reply is, \textit{Njema, hemd il Illahi,} Good, praise be to God. The Arabic \textit{Sabalkheir,} Good morning, and \textit{Masalkheir,} Good afternoon, are often heard. The more elegant forms are \textit{Subahk Alláh bilkheir} and \textit{Masak Alláh bilkheir.} It is not usual to inquire about the health of a wife or of the women of a household, unless among very intimate friends, or for some special reason. When necessary, one should say, \textit{Hu-jambo nyumbani?} or \textit{U hali gani nyumbani?} How are you in the house, i.e., How are your household, or those in your house? It is proper, if you are asked how you are, always to answer, well, for the sake of the omen; and similarly if you are asked \textit{Habari gani?} What news? to answer \textit{Njema,} good, and then afterwards to give a true account of the matter.

In Swahili Interjections a final \textit{k} is often distinctly heard. It requires much practice to enable a European to make this sound properly.
LIST OF INTERJECTIONS.

A.

Ah! An exclamation of mingled grief and surprize. The final h must be distinctly sounded.

Ahsánt or asanti, thank you. Ah-sánt is an Arabic word meaning, You have done well. It is sometimes used profusely by way of mere compliment.

Amina. Amen, used at the end of a prayer.

Ati! Look you! I say! It is used generally as a means of calling attention to what has been said, or is about to be said. It is a sort of vocal note of admiration.

B.

Bassi! or Bass! That will do! Enough! Stop! No more!

C.

Chub! An exclamation of impatience and contempt; the ch is the sound most heard, the vowel being very short and insignificant.

E.

Ee! O! The interjection of invocation.

Ewe! plur. Enyi! You there! A rather contemptuous way of demanding attention. It is used for Hi! I say! and any exclamation merely meant to attract notice. It must not be used to a superior and rarely only to an equal. It is customary to call to them Bwana! i.e., Master! The answers will be found in the previous list, p. 220, under the word Yes.

H.

Hayá! An exclamation borrowed from the Arabic; it means, give your attention to this, go on with it. It is used where we say, Come along! Look sharp! Be quick! Go on! If it has been proposed to do anything, Hayá! means, Let us set about it. Hayá! is commonly used by a master or overlooker to hasten men about their work.

Hima! Quick! Be quick! Make haste! Often doubled, Hima hima!

Hōdī! with a great stress on the o. It is not right to enter any house or room (not your own) without first crying Hōdī! and waiting for some one to come, or at least to answer, Kārib, Come in!

J.

Je! or Ye! Hullo! What now! Well! What is it?

Kārib! i.e., come near! It is used to invite people into a house, to join a party, or to sit down and put themselves at their ease. Kārib! may generally be translated, Come and sit with us! and a common answer is, Nimekaa kitako, I am set down.

Kéfule! An exclamation of contempt.

Kua heri! Good-bye! Farewell! Sometimes a plural is made, Kuaherini, though it seems to be an incorrect form.

Sometimes a special friend adds, Ya kuonana, as much as to say, May we soon meet again.

Kumbe! What! What then! An expression of surprize, especially used when things turn out not to be as they were represented to be.

L.

Laiti! Oh that! Would that! An exclamation of regret, a wish that things had been otherwise.

Loo! An exclamation of surprize; the o is more dwelt upon in proportion to the amount of surprize.

M.

Marahaba! Thank you! It is well! used by way of acknowledging a gift or a compliment.

Miye! Me! I! I am the one!

Mwenyewe! You did it yourself!

O.

Ole! An exclamation foreboding evil. Woe! Ole wenu! Woe unto you! Ole wangu? Woe is me!

Saa! You! I say! It is put after a word to give emphasis to it. Njoo saa! Come on, do!

Salaam! Peace! Hail! It is used as a salutation by the Indians. The regular Arabic Salaam aleikum! Peace be with you! and the answer, Wa aleik salaam! And with you peace! is not very commonly heard. Salaam is often used in the sense of compliments: Salaam Bibi! With the mistress' compliments.—said in presenting anything.

Similla! Out of the way! Originally, as it is said, Bismillah, In the name of God. It is now the common cry by which people are warned of something coming. Similla punda! Make way for a donkey! Similla ubau! Take care of the plank! Two servants frequently go before a great man to clear the way for him, and call out to any one in the road, Similla! A plural Similleni! is sometimes made as though it were the imperative of a verb. The more correct phrase for Get out of the way! is Jitenge!

Starehe! Don’t disturb yourself! When a new-comer enters, the rest rise to do him honour, which he tries to prevent by saying, Starehe! Starehe! It is properly used to deprecate any trouble or disturbance on the speaker’s account.

T.

Tendeni! Go on! Let us go! Probably the imperative of ku-tenda, to do or to be employed about.

Tutu! Don’t touch! Used to a child meddling with what he had better leave alone.

V.

Vema! Very well! So be it! That will do!

W.

Weye! You! You are the one! It’s you!
FORMATION OF WORDS.

The formation and introduction of new words go on so freely in Swahili, that no guide to the language would be complete without a section on the subject.

Foreign words are adopted in a shape as nearly like their own as the rules in regard to Swahili syllables will allow. At first indeed a word may be used in its crude original shape, but it soon has vowels introduced into, and subjoined to it, so as to bring it into a regular form. Arabic words seldom present great difficulties when once the gutturals have been toned down. Thus khábar (news) softens into habári, wákt (time) becomes first wák̄t̄i and then vakáti, kabr or gabr (a grave) is softened and expanded into kabári. It is seldom that an Arabic word presents so much difficulty as did these three. Portuguese has furnished some words, as kasha (caxa), a large box; meza, a table; mvinyo (vinho), wine. French gives a few, as bweta (boite) a box; divai (du vin) claret. An instance of English adaptation occurs in manowari, which is the current designation of an English man-of-war.
FORMATION OF WORDS

Verbs.

Some rules have been given at the end of the section on Verbs for the formation of several derived forms (p. 157). Verbs in the causative and neuter forms may be made from other parts of speech, especially from foreign Adjectives, by changing their final syllable into -isha or -esha, -ika or -eka, as though they had been originally Verbs.

Ghali, dear. Kughalisha, to make dear.
Laini, smooth. Kulainisha, to make smooth.
Kulainika, to be made smooth.

Beside those formations which are in daily use, it is a great help to the understanding of the language to bear in mind the traces of formations not now ordinarily employed. In regard to Verbs it is a constant rule that those ending in -ua reverse the meaning of similar verbs ending in -a only.

Kufunga, to fasten. Kufungua, to unfasten.
Kufuka, to fill in a hole. Kufukua, to clear out a hole.

Several verbs show traces of a rule, which prevails in some other African languages, that the change of -a into -ya gives the Verb a causative meaning.

Kupona, to get well. Kuponya, to cure.
Kuogopa, to fear. Kuogofya, to frighten.

There are many questions about the form of Verbs which need much more investigation. What is the rule by which some causatives are made in -sha and some in -za? Has the -sha termination the effect of to make is be, and -za that of to make to do? What is the explanation of the apparently neuter form of some active Verbs?
such as kufunika, to cover? What is the effect of the terminations -ma and -ta, as in kuungama and kufumbata? What dialect did they originate in? What are the rules for the termination -anya, which seems to be common in the most northerly Swahili?

It has been shown in the section on verbs how some tenses are formed by the use of an auxiliary, and some by a tense prefix which has no independent meaning. An example of the transition between the two is supplied by the three forms of the negative infinitive: 1. kutoa kupenda; 2. kutoa penda; 3. kutopenda. In the first form both words have a substantial independence; in the second the principal verb, penda, is already drawn out of its proper form, and depends for its meaning upon the first verb, toa, as upon a prefix; in the third it has swallowed up the final of the first verb and appropriated its prefix ku-. The form of the future prefix which is used with relatives points to taka as the original form, and the verb kutaka is so like our own word to will that one can hardly be wrong in supposing that in both cases the change from a verb expressing volition to a mere sign of tense expressing futurity has proceeded in a similar manner. Now, if the tense prefixes were ever independent words, the principal verb must have been in the infinitive; and, if so, the presence of the ku- before monosyllabic verbs, wherever the accent requires it, is fully explained; it was dropped wherever it served no purpose, and retained where it was convenient to retain it. The original independence of the tense prefix and of the principal verb would also go to account for the way in which the objective prefix clings to the principal verb; it would then have originally followed the ku- and so been severed by it from all the other prefixes. The only cases in which the natives separate the prefixes from the verbs in writing seem to be where a particle of relation is joined with the -na- -li- and -taka- prefixes, and in the past conditional or -ngali- tense. It is curious to have in such a word as atakayekuja the same letters exactly used to form a tense prefix and to express an independent verb. Atakaye kuja means, who desires to come, atakayekuja, who will come, in the sense of a simple future.

Adjectives.

Adjectives are made from Verbs in correct Swahili by substituting -vu or -fu for the final -a. Where the final is preceded by a consonant the Adjective is made from the applied form.

- Kunyamaa, to remain silent. -nyamaru, silent.
- Kuharibu, to destroy. -haribifu, destructive.

Verbs that end in -ka change this into -vu in making the Adjective.

- Kuchoka, to become tired. -chovu, tired.

These forms do not now appear to be freely made or used in the common dialect of Zanzibar. A somewhat similar meaning may be expressed by the use of the variable Preposition -a followed by the Infinitive of the Verb.

Substantives.

Substantives may be freely made by prefixing to the simple form of the Verb the initial letters proper to the first, or to the fourth class, according to whether it is a living being or a thing which does what the Verb expresses. It must be observed, that this form is so purely verbal that it takes an object after it just as a Verb would.

Mfanya biashara, a trade maker, i.e., a merchant.
Vifaa, things which are of service, necessaries.
Kifungua mlango, the door opener.

The final letter is sometimes changed into -i, and the word ceases to govern an object.

Msemi, a speaker.

Where the final -a is preceded by a -b- it becomes -v-.

Kwiba, to steal.
Kugomba, to quarrel.

Mwivi, a thief.
Mgomevi, a quarrelsome person.

Where the above rules would produce a common word with another meaning, the ku of the Infinitive is retained.

Kulima, to cultivate.

Mkulima, a cultivator.

Mlima, a mountain.

There are a few traces of a formation of verbals by changing the last letter into -e, as in -teule, chosen, from kuteul[?]a, to choose.

The habitual doer of an action may be denoted by adding -ji to the simple form of the Verb and prefixing the initial letters proper to the first Class.

Kuomba, to beg.
Kuiba, to steal.

Mwombaji, a beggar.
Mwibaji, an habitual thief.

Another way of denoting a person who does what the Verb expresses is formed by changing the final letter into -si, -shi, or -zi, and employing the usual prefixes.
When the Verb ends in -ka the -ka becomes shi; where the Verb ends in -ta the -ta becomes -si.

Kuokoa, to save.
Mwokazi, a saviour.
Kununua, to buy.
Mnunuzi, a purchaser.
Kuaha, to build (in stone).
Mwashi, a mason.
Kufuata, to follow.
Mfuasi, a follower.

The result of the action denoted by the Verb may be expressed by changing the final -a into -o and using some appropriate prefix.

Kuzaa, to bear.
Mazao, fruit, produce.
Kutenda, to do.
Kitendo, an action.
Kwenda, to go.
Mwendo, a journey, or going.

Of the Substantival prefixes those of the fourth (Ki-) Class are most often used.

The same forms especially in the fifth Class are used to express the place where an action is generally done.

Kuoka, to bake.
Joko, a baking place.
Kukusanyika, to be assembled.
Makusanyiko, a gathering place, or an assembly.

Words of similar meaning are also made by the terminations -zi -shi, -si. See above.

Mavao, or Mavazi, dress, garments.
Kizao, or Kizazi, birth, a generation.
Pendo, or Penzi, love.

Where the Verb and Substantive are both borrowed from the Arabic, it is useful to remember that the Substantive has generally a where some other vowel occurs in the Verb.

Kuabudu, to worship.
Ibada, worship.
Kusafiri, to travel.
Safari, a journey.
Sometimes both the Arabic and the Swahili forms occur.

Kujibu, to answer.  Jawabu and majibu, an answer.

Verbs joined with relatives, or with the particles of place or time, may be treated as Substantives.

Wendako hote, whithersoever thou goest.
Killa nendapo, every time I go.
Zikerezwazo, turnery, turned goods.

Substantives of place may be made from Adjectives by putting them into the form required by Mahali, place (Class VII.).

Panyamavu, a quiet place.

The place where something is may be expressed by penyi.

Penyi mtende, where the date tree is, or was.

The place for doing anything may be expressed by pa followed by the Infinitive of the Verb.

Pakutokea, a place to go out at, an outlet.

Abstract Substantives are ordinarily formed by means of the prefix U- or W-

An instance in which both Arabic and Swahili forms are used occurs in the word for enmity.

Adui, an enemy.  Wadui or Adawa, enmity.

Nations, their country and language, are regularly expressed by the prefixes of the first, sixth, and fourth Classes.

*Mzungu, a European. Uzungu, the native country of the Europeans. Kizungu, the language which Europeans speak.

It is to be observed that the U-form would also express the being a Galla. European, &c., and that the Ki-form denotes the sort or kind of anything, not of language only. It is seldom used absolutely except of the language, but when preceded by -a (of) its true meaning becomes evident.

*Mavao ya Kizungu, European dress.

Viazi vya Kizungu, potatoes.

The Ki-form may be made from other substantives.

*Mavao ya kifaume, royal robes (form mfaume, a king, and ufaume, kingdom or kingship).

The formation of Adverbs and Prepositions has been described in the section on the smaller parts of speech.

End of Part I.
HANDBOOK OF THE SWAHILI LANGUAGE
AS SPOKEN AT ZANZIBAR.

PART II.
SWAHILI-ENGLISH VOCABULARY.
PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS.

In using the following Vocabulary it is necessary to remember that Swahili words change very much at the beginning and not often at the end.

In searching for the meaning of a word, which is not to be found exactly as written, it is well to examine first the final syllable, so as to correct, or remove, any termination or enclitic which may be attached to it. These are as follow:—

1. The passive of the verb is made by changing -a into -wa. Verbs ending in two consecutive vowels frequently use as their passive the passive of the applied form which ends in -liwa or -lewa.

   Kupenda, to love. Kupendwa, to be loved.
   Kufungua, to unfasten. Kufunguliwa, to be unfastened.
   Kuzaa, to bear. Kuzaliwa, to be born.
   Kukomboa, to buy back. Kukombolewa, to be bought back.

2. Verbs ending in -a change the -a into -e in the subjunctive and imperative, and into -i in the negative present.

   Pende, love thou.
   Apende, that he may love.
   Hapendi, he does not love.

   The change of the final vowel distinguishes hapendi, he does not love, from hapenda, a contracted form of nikanpenda, and I loved.

3. The plural of the imperative is made by adding -ni to the singular.

   Pendani or Pendeni, love ye.
   Sifuni, praise ye.
   Fikirini, consider ye.
4. Substantives form the locative case by adding -ni.

Nyumbani mwangu, inside my house.
Nyumbani kwangu, to or at my house.
Nyumbani pangu, by or near my house. All from Nyumba.

5. -ni may stand for nini? What?
Watahani? What do you want?

6. Je? How? is subjoined to the verb expressing the action inquired about.

Asemaje? How does he speak? i.e., What does he say?

7. mno, exceedingly, always follows the word it qualifies, and may be treated as an enclitic.

8. -to, which, however, rarely occurs in the dialect of Zanzibar, denotes goodness and fitness.

Kuwecaka, to place. Kuwekatoto, to place properly.
Manuka, smells. Manukato, scents.

9. The relative signs and the particles denoting time and place are subjoined to the verb when there is no tense prefix, otherwise they follow the tense prefix.

Tulala-po, when we sleep.
Tuna-po-lala, while we are sleeping.

The particles denoting time and place are,

-po, when or where.
-ho, whither or whence.
-mo, wherein.

These preceded only by the personal prefix imply the substantive verb to be.

Yupo, he is there, not far off.
Zipo, &c., &c., they are there, not far off, &c., &c.
Yuko, he is there, far off.
Ziko, &c., &c., they are there, far off, &c., &c.
Yumo, he is there inside.
Zimo, &c., &c., they are there inside, &c., &c.

The relative signs are, -cho, -lo, -o, -po, -vya, -wo, -ye, -yo, -zo.
These syllables with na prefixed have the meaning of and, or with him, her, it, or them.
10. The possessive pronouns may be used in enclitic forms.

Thy, or your, may be expressed by subjoining, according to the class of the substantive, -cho, -lo, -o, -po, -vyo, -wo, -yo, or -zo.

His, hers, or its, may be expressed by subjoining -che, -e, -le, -pe, -ye, -wo, -ye, or -ze.

Other enclitic forms of the possessive pronouns are,— -nyu, or -angu, my.
-ko, or -ako, thy.
-ke, or -ake, his, &c.

The final letter of the substantive generally merges into the initial of the pronoun.

Mwanangu, my child.
Mwanako, thy child.
Mwanake, his child.

11. New verbs may always be formed when wanted by changing the final vowel into -ia or -ea, -lia or -lea, to make the applied form; into -za or -sha, -iza or -eza, to make a causative form; into -ana, to make a reciprocal form; and into -ka, -ika, or -sha, to make a neuter or quasi-passive form.

12. In old and poetical Swahili the object of the verb is suffixed as well as prefixed, as in U-ni-hifathi-mi, Do thou preserve me; where both the ni and the mi denote the object of the verb.

The syllables thus used are -cho, -lo, -ni, -nyi, -o, -po, -si, -vyo, -we, -wo, -ye, -yo, -zo.

Having cleared the word of all adventitious terminations it will probably be found at once; if not, look for the first syllable, and so on, taking syllable by syllable until the word, its number, person, and tense, will all have been explained. It must, however, be borne in mind that nouns in u- or w- generally drop the initial letter in the plural and frequently substitute for it n- or ny-.

Verbs and adjectives are here indexed under the first letter of the simplest form, or of that to which the prefixes are joined.

Kupenda will be found as Penda ku-, to love.
Mabaya will be found as -baya, bad.

Words which may be used as adjectives or as substantives, but from their nature can hardly be applied to any but animate beings, will be found under m- or mw-, as they can very rarely in the singular take any other prefix.
Substantives are indexed by the prefix with which they are generally used. It must be remembered, however, that the use of particular prefixes may be nearly always varied to suit any particular shade of meaning, so that if the word is not to be found under one, it may happen that its meaning can be found under some other.

Where no plural is mentioned, it is to be understood that the plural, if used at all, is in the same form as the singular.

The following table of prefixes may be found useful. The use of each will be explained in the Vocabulary.

Substantival prefixes.

* These may all be preceded by Ha, to form negative tenses in the indicative mood, and personal prefixes followed by -si- make negative subjunctives.
Preliminary Observations.

3. Particles of place, time, and relation, which follow the tense prefix, or, if there is no tense prefix, are subjoined to the verb.

-cho -mo -wo
-ko -o -ye
-kwo -po -yo
-lo -vyo -zo

4. Objective prefixes, which always immediately precede the verb.

-i- -mw- -u-
-ki- -n- -vi-
-ku- -ni- -wa-
-li- -pa- -ya-
-m- -tu- -zi-

A suppressed l or r always exists between two consecutive vowels. It is often heard in the Merima dialect, and frequently appears where otherwise three or more vowels would follow one another. However, the more classical the Swahili, the less tolerant it is in any case of an l between vowels, or even as an initial letter.

kee = kelele.
ete = lete.

The following letters are interchanged:

l and r, s and sh, and vulgarly hi and cki, and th and z.

Zanzibar ch = t (M.). e = a (M.).
h = kh (Ar.).
j = d (M.). y (A.) (N.).
t = ch (Ozi.).
v = z (A.).
z = v (Mer.), th (Patta and Ozi.), j (vulgar).

The letters enclosed in parentheses denote the various dialects.

(M.) = Mombas (kimvita).
(Mer.) = Southern Coast dialect (kimerima).
(A.) = Lamoo (kiamu).
(Ar.) = Arabic.
(N.) = Poetical Swahili (kingozi).
The sound of a in Swahili resembles that of a in the English word "father." It is, perhaps,—except when doubled—somewhat sharper and lighter.

When the final a of any prefix—except the negative prefix ha—is brought by composition to precede immediately either e or i, it coalesces with them and produces the sound of a long e.

Ahaenda is pronounced akenda. Ahawaila is pronounced akaweta. A and u have a tendency to coalesce into an o sound.

Arabic substantives incorporated into Swahili have often been made by changing -i- in the verb into -a- in the substantive.

Kubarizi, to hold a public audience. Barazu, a public audience.

Kusafiri, to travel. Safari, a journey.

A occurs in some dialects where e is used in Zanzibar. See E.

A = ya, of.

-a with a varying initial letter, of. -a is used in such phrases as the following for in: Unilie wa macho, put it in my eyes. Akamchoma ya kitovu, and he stabbed him in the navel.

A-, the sign of the third person singular prefixed to verbs when governed by substantives which denote animate beings—he, she, or it.

Where the tense prefix begins with a, one of the a's disappears.

The following are instances of the way in which this a occurs.

A-penda (for a-a-penda), he loves. A-na-penda, he is loving.

A-ki-penda, he being in the condition of loving. A-ngi-penda, he would love.

C.

C is required only in writing the sound of the English ch or of the Italian c before i and e.

In the dialect of Zanzibar ch frequently stands for the t of more northern Swahili, as—Chupa, a bottle (Zanzibar) = Tupa (Mombas).

Kucheka, to laugh (Zanz.) = Kuteka (Momb.).

Chi, in the vulgar dialect, and amongst the slaves in Zanzibar, stands for ki in the more correct language. Several of the tribes in the interior follow the same rule as the Italian in always pronouncing the same root letter ch before i and e, and k before a and o.

Thus slaves commonly say, Chitu chidojgo, a little thing, for Kitu kidojgo.

As a rule, in all Swahili where the preformative ki has to be prefixed to an adjective or pronoun or tense prefix beginning with a vowel, it becomes ch, thus—

Kisu changu, my knife, not Kisu kian gu.
Kisu chakata, the knife cuts, not Kisu kia kata.
Kitu chema cho chote, every good thing whatsoever, not Kitu kiema kio kiote.

Where ch represents ki, as the initial sound of a substantive, the plural is made by changing ch into vy.

Chombo, a vessel, Vyombo, vessels.
But where ch stands for t, the plural is made by prefixing ma.
Machupa, bottles.
Machungwa, oranges.
The Arabs confound in their pronunciation ch with sh, though the sounds are in Swahili perfectly distinct.

It would perhaps be an improvement to write all ch's which represent ki by a simple c, which has been used for this sound in Sechuana, and to write all ch's which represent t by ty, which has been used for this sound in writing Zulu. But both are here represented by ch, because at least in the infancy of our studies it is puzzling to have two signs for one sound, and neither way of writing might be quite satisfactory in all cases.

There is little doubt that the northern t becomes ch by the addition of a y sound, as the same sort of change takes place with d, which becomes dy or j, and sometimes with n, making it ny or the Spanish ñ. The same sort of change in English vulgarizes nature into nachur, and Indian into Injun.

E.

E has a sound between those of a in gate and of ai in chair.

In the dialect of Zanzibar it is often substituted for the a of more northern Swahili, especially as representing the Arabic fet'ha.

Merikebu, a ship, is in the Mombas dialect Marikabu, and in the Arabic Markab.

The sound of e often arises from the fusion of the final a of a prefix with an e or i which follows it, as—

Akenda for A-ka-endu, and he went.

Akweta for A-ka-va-ita, and he called them.

Some of the cases in which e in the Zanzibar dialect stands for a in northern Swahili may be explained by the substitution at Zanzibar of in for a mere 'n, as in the word for "land" or country," which is 'nti at Mombas, with so mere an 'n that the vowel of the preceding word may be run into it, as in the saying—

"Mundánti, mwanánti."

"A country can be ruined only by its own children."

Whereas in Zanzibar, besides the usual change of t into ch, the first syllable has generally a distinct i sound, and may be better written inchi.

Thus at Mombas the root of the adjective "many" seems to be ngi, making the substantive "plenty," or "a large quantity," ungi, and with the proper prefix "many people," wa-ngi. But in Zanzibar "plenty" is w-ingi, and "many people" wengi, as if wa-ingi.

F
F has the same sound as in English.
F and v are confounded by the Arabs, though in Swahili perfectly distinct, thus:—
Ku-faa means—to be profitable to.
Ku-vaa means—to put on.
There is, however, in some cases a little indistinctness, as in the common termination ifu or ivu; the right letter is probably in all cases a v.
The Arabs in talking Swahili turn p's into f's, and say funda for punda, a donkey; and conversely, some slaves from inland tribes turn f's into p's. P, however, does sometimes become f before a y sound, as kuogopa, to fear, kuogofya, to frighten.
There is a curious fy sound used in some dialects of Swahili, which is rarely heard in Zanzibar.

G.

G is always to be pronounced hard, as in “gate.” Much confusion arises from the way in which the Arabic letters jīm and kaaf or qaf are pronounced by different Arabs. Jīm is properly an English j, and is so used by the Swahili, and qaf is properly a guttural k, but most Arabs in Zanzibar pronounce either jīm or qaf as a hard g. This must be remembered in writing or looking for many Swahili words.

The Arabic Ghain is retained in many Swahili words borrowed from the Arabic, and a similar sound occurs in African languages also. It is here written gh. Most Europeans think it has something of an r sound, but this is a mistake; it is a hard grating g, made wholly in the throat. It resembles the Dutch g, and the German g approaches it. See N.

H.

H has the same sound as in the English word "hate."

There are in Arabic two distinct h's, one wholly made in the throat, the other somewhat lighter than the English h. In Swahili there is only one h sound, which is used for both.

The Arabic kh is pronounced as a simple h in all words which are thoroughly incorporated into Swahili. The kh is used by Arabs and in words imperfectly assimilated. Some people regard it as a mark of good education to give the proper Arabic sounds to all words of Arabic origin.

In Arabic a syllable often ends with h, which is then strongly pronounced; but in Swahili the h is generally transposed so as to precede the vowel.

I.

I is pronounced like ee in feel.

I before a vowel generally becomes y. It is in many cases immaterial whether i or y be written, but where the accent would otherwise fall upon it, its consonantal character becomes obvious.

An unaccented i is often interchanged with a short u sound. Thus the word for lead may be pronounced either risasi or rusasi.

N has generally an ə sound implied in it. It is sometimes expressed following the n, as in the prefix ni-. The final i of ni- disappears in rapid pronunciation, and in the first person of the future, as n cannot coalesce with t, both letters are often omitted. When n is followed by a vowel, or by d, g, j, or z, the ə sound is lost. When n is followed by other consonants it either disappears altogether or the ə sound is more or less distinctly prefixed, so as to make the n a syllable by itself. The ə sound is more distinct in the dialect of Zanzibar than in more northern Swahili.

Where i follows the final a of prefix (except the negative prefix ha) it coalesces with a into the sound of a long e.

I, is or was, governed by a singular noun of the class which does not change to form the plural; are or were, governed by a plural noun in mi.

I-, or before a vowel, y-, the personal prefix used with verbs whose subject is a singular noun of the class which does not change to form the plural, or a plural in mi, it or they.

J.

J. The correct pronunciation of this letter, and especially that of the Mombas dialect, is a very peculiar one. The most prominent sound is that of y, but it is preceded by another resembling d. The French di is perhaps the nearest European representative. The Swahili write it by the Arabic jim, which is exactly an English j.

In the more northern dialects and in the old poetical Swahili the j is represented by a pure y.
  Moya = maja, one.
  Maji = maji, water.
A d in the dialect of Mombas very commonly becomes a j in that of Zanzibar.
  Ndia (M.), a road, Njia (Zanz.).
  Kutinda (M.), to slaughter; Kucheinja (Zanz.).
Many words which are properly spelt with a z are vulgarly pronounced with a j in Zanzibar, as,
  Kanju, for kanzu.
  Chenja, for chenza.
This is only carrying to excess the rule that a z in the neighbouring mainland languages becomes a j in Swahili.

The Arabs and some Swahili confuse j with g. Thus the late ruler of Zanzibar was often spoken of as Bwana Magidi, his proper title being Seyid Majid.

J-, a prefix applied to substantives and adjectives in the singular of the class which make their plural in ma-, when they begin with a vowel. See ji-.

K.

K is pronounced as in English.

The Arabs have two k's, one, the kef or kaf, a little lighter than the English k; and one, the kahf or qaf, made wholly in the throat, and confounded by many Arabs with a hard g. There is a curious catch in the throat between the preceding vowel and the qaf, very hard to explain, but easy enough to imitate. Although the correct pronunciation of these two k's is an elegance, it is not necessary nor very commonly observed in speaking Swahili.

Ki is very commonly pronounced chi in Zanzibar, especially by slaves of the Nyassa and Yao tribes.

Kh, the Arabic kha, occurs only in words borrowed from the Arabic, and subsides into a simple h so soon as the word is thoroughly naturalized.

L.

L is pronounced as in English.

L is not distinguished from r in African languages of the same family as Swahili. The distinction becomes important in Swahili on account of the Arabic words which have been incorporated into it. Thus—

Mahali, means a place, but Mahari a dowry.

Waredi means a rose, but Waledi a youth. Slaves, however, frequently confound these.

When r can be used for l, it has a light smooth sound, as in English.

There is a latent l sound between every two consecutive vowels in Swahili and at the beginning of some verbs, which appears in their derivatives and in other African languages: thus the common passive of kufungua is kufunguliva.

So far is this disposition to drop an l carried, that even kuleta, to bring, is in old Swahili eto. It is characteristic of the Merima dialect to retain these 7's.

L and u are sometimes apparently interchanged.

Mlango, a door, is vulgarly pronounced Mrango.

Ufalme, a kingdom, may be written Ufaume.

In these cases, however, both forms are probably contractions from Mulango and Ufalume.

L becomes d after n, and is sometimes confounded with d in inexact pronunciation.

Ndume = Nlume or Nume, male.

L- or li-, the prefix proper to pronouns and verbs governed by words in the singular, of the class which make their plural in ma-.

Luva, sandal wood (?) .

M is pronounced as in English.

M before b generally represents an n. Mb stands sometimes for nb, as nyumba mbaya, for nyumba n-baya; sometimes it represents nw or nu, as mbingu for n-wingu.

M is frequently either followed by w or u, or else has a sort of semi-vowel power, as if preceded by a half-suppressed u.

The natives of Zanzibar very rarely say mu, they change it into um or rather 'm.' Even Mwenyiezi Muungu, Almighty God, becomes 'Mnyezimngu.'

It is important to write 'm, and not m only, where it represents mu if a b or w follow, because otherwise the m might be supposed to coalesce with them. If any other consonants follow, it is immaterial, for m must then always stand for mu, and be capable of being pronounced as a separate syllable.

Any verb may be turned into a substantive by prefixing 'm or mu to mean one who does, &c., followed immediately by the object of the verb or the thing done. The last letter is sometimes changed into i and if ji is added to the substantive it gets the sense of one who habitually does what the verb signifies.

M-, 'm, mu-, or mw-, sign of the second person plural prefixed to verbs.

M-, 'm, mu, or mw-, the singular prefix of those nouns which make their plural in wa-, if they denote animate beings, or in mi-, if they do not.

M-, mw-, or mw-, the prefix proper to pronouns governed by the case in -ni, when it denotes within or inside of.

Ma-, the sign of the plural prefixed to substantives (and to adjectives agreeing with them) which have either no prefix in the singular or begin with j- or ji-.

All words intended to denote something specially great of its kind make their plural in ma-.

Foreign words denoting a person, or an office, make their plural in ma-. In the vulgar dialect of Zanzibar nearly all foreign words are made plural by prefixing ma-.

Many plural nouns in ma- must be translated as though they were singulars, the true singular being used only to denote some one exceptionally large or important instance.

When followed by an i or e, the a of ma coalesces with it and forms a long e sound.

N.

N is pronounced as in English.

An i sound is generally connected with an initial n. It sometimes precedes more or less distinctly, and may be written in or 'n, making the n a distinct syllable. Sometimes the n flows into the following letter, so that the i sound is altogether lost. Very often it follows it as in the common syllable ni or ny. It is characteristic of the Zanzibar dialect to make the initial i sound distinct. Thus inch, a country, is at Mombas 'nti.

Ni is often contracted into 'n or n, and where n would be dropped ni sometimes is so, as in the first person of the future tense, nnitapenda or 'ntapenda or tapenda.

N cannot be placed before b, ch, j, k, l, p, r, s, t, v, or w.

Before b, w, and perhaps v, it becomes m, and w changes into b.

Before k, p, and perhaps t, it is dropped, and the consonant gets an explosive sound.

Before l, r, and perhaps t, the n remains, but the other consonant becomes a d.

Before ch, j, m, n, and s, it is merely dropped.

N can stand before d, g, j, y, and z.

N before k is in two cases at least contracted into h.

Hapenda = Nikapenda.

Hipenda = Nikihipenda.

There is a sound in Swahili which is treated as a simple consonant, which does not occur in European languages as an initial sound. It is very nearly the same with the final ng in English, in such words as loving, going, &c. The sounds of n and g seem both audible, but so blended that neither of them can be carried on to the following vowel. It is here written ng', to distinguish it from the common sound ng, in which the g passes on to the following vowel. There is some little difference in the way in which different persons pronounce it; it has sometimes more of a gn sound, and might be so written if it be understood that the two letters are so fused together that neither can be heard as if it stood alone. It has been sometimes written n, which is either a mistake or very misleading. That the sound really is ng, may be proved by the fact that such words as begin with it are treated as words beginning with n, and that when other prefixes are applied they are treated as if the root began with \textit{g}. It is not, however, a very common sound in Swahili.

There is another sound compounded of \textit{n} and \textit{i}, which is very fairly represented by the Spanish \textit{ni}, or by \textit{ni} in such English words as companion, &c. It is pronounced perhaps in Swahili with a slightly broader and more nasal sound. It is here written \textit{ny}, to distinguish it from the common syllable \textit{ni}, in which the \textit{i} has a vowel sound.

The \textit{ny} sound in the dialect of Zanzibar sometimes represents an \textit{n} in many northern Swahili, as in \textit{Kunwa} or \textit{kumyca}, to drink.

The change from \textit{n} to \textit{ny} has in many verbs the effect of giving a causative meaning, as in \textit{kupona}, to get well, \textit{kuponya}, to make well, to save.

\textit{N-}, or \textit{ni-}, the sign of the first person singular of verbs, I.

\textit{-n-}, or \textit{-ni-}, the objective prefix proper to denote the first person, me.

\textit{N-} (see \textit{ny-}).

1. A prefix frequently occurring in substantives which do not change to form the plural. If followed by \textit{d}, \textit{g}, \textit{j}, or \textit{z}, it is pronounced with them and does not form a distinct syllable. Before other consonants it forms a distinct syllable, and may be written \textit{'n-} or sometimes \textit{in}-.

2. The plural prefix of substantives which begin in the singular with \textit{u-}, followed by a consonant. The \textit{u} is dropped and \textit{n} prefixed before \textit{d}, \textit{g}, \textit{j}, and \textit{z}.

Before \textit{b}, and perhaps \textit{v}, the \textit{n} changes into \textit{m}, before \textit{w} the \textit{nw} become \textit{wb}. Before \textit{l} or \textit{r} the \textit{nl} or \textit{nr} become \textit{nd}. Before \textit{k}, \textit{p}, and \textit{t}, the \textit{n} is dropped and the other consonant gets an explosive or aspirated sound, and may be written \textit{kt'}, \textit{pt'}, and \textit{t'}; before \textit{ch}, \textit{f}, \textit{m}, \textit{n}, and \textit{s}, the \textit{n} is merely dropped. Where, however, dropping the \textit{u-} would leave the word a monosyllable, the \textit{u-} is retained, and \textit{ny} prefixed.

\textit{N-} (see \textit{ny-}). The prefix proper to adjectives agreeing with substantives of the class which does not change to form its plural of whichever number, or with plural substantives which make their singular in \textit{u-}. Where the simple form of the adjective begins with a vowel, \textit{ny-} is prefixed, except \textit{-ema}, good, which makes \textit{njema} or \textit{ngema}. The changes before a consonant are the same as those given just above for the plural nouns in \textit{u-}.

\textit{Nyumba} \textit{mbaya}, not \textit{nbaya}.

\textit{chache}, not \textit{ncchache}.

P.

P is pronounced as in English.
P, at the beginning of a word, has frequently an aspirated or rather an explosive sound, such as Irishmen sometimes give it. This is very marked in the name of the island of Pemba or P'emba. P'epo, the plural of upepo, wind, has a very strong explosive sound given to the first p, but in upepo both p's are smooth, like an ordinary English p. It is probable that this explosive sound represents a suppressed n.
P followed by a y sound sometimes becomes j: kuogopa, to fear, kuogofya, to frighten; kuapa, to swear, kuaifya, to make to swear.

Pa- or P-, the prefix proper to adjectives, pronouns, and verbs of both numbers governed by mahali, place or places.

The two great feasts are the three days at the end of the Ramathan, when every one makes presents, and three days after the tenth of Thil hajj or Mfunguo wa tatu, when every one ought to slaughter some animal, and feast the poor.

Siku a mwaka (see Mwongo, Kigunzi), the Nairuz, about the 23rd of August, the beginning of the Swahili and nautical year. The old custom is for every one, but especially the women, to bathe in the sea in the night or morning: then they cook a great mess of grain and pulse, which is eaten about noon by all who like to come. The fires are all extinguished and lighted again by rubbing two pieces of wood together. Formerly no inquiry was made as to any murder or violence committed on this day, and old quarrels used regularly to be fought out upon it.

T.

T is pronounced as in English. There are two t's in Arabic, one much thicker than the English t, but only very careful speakers distinguish them in Swahili.

T at the beginning of a word has sometimes an explosive sound, as in t'aka, dirt. It is probable that this represents a suppressed n.

There is a slight difference in sound between the t's of tatu, three, and tano, five, the former being the smoother, but natives do not seem conscious of the difference.

T in northern Swahili frequently becomes ch in the dialect of Zanzibar.

Kuteka, to laugh (M.) kucheka (Zanz.). But kuteka, to plunder, or to draw water, does not change.

Kutinda, to slaughter (M.) kuchinja (Zanz.).

There is no sound similar to that of the English th in the original language of Zanzibar. It occurs in some dialects of Swahili in place of v or z. There are however in Arabic four th's. 1. Tha, pronounced like the English th in thing. 2. Thal, pronounced like the English th in this. 3 and 4. Thad and Tha' or Dthau, which are scarcely distinguished by the Arabs themselves, and have a very thick variety of the thal sound. Practically the two English th's are quite sufficient, and the ear soon catches the right method of employing them.

The Indians and many Africans pronounce all these as z. Some Swahili confuse the various th's with z, and employ the thal sound for words properly written with a z, as wathiri for vaziri, a vizir.

Appendix II.

Specimens of Swahili correspondence in prose and verse, containing:

1. Two Swahili letters, the one on giving, the other on receiving a small present. The forms of address, &c., are those used in all letters, whatever their subject may be.

2. Two specimens of verses sent as letters, the first to excuse breaking an appointment, the second sent from Pemba by a Mombas man to his friends at home, who upbraided him for not returning. This form of writing is a very favourite one.

I.

Illā jenāb il mohēb rafiki yangu, bwana wangu, bwana mkubwa, D. S., salamu sana, ama baada ya salamu, nalikuwa siwezi siku nyingi, lakini sasa sijambo kidogo, ama baadahu, nimekuletea kitoweo kidogo tafāthali upokee, nao k'uku saba'a, wa salamu, wa katabahu rafiki yako H. bin A.

To the honourable the beloved, my friend, my master, the great sir, D. S., many compliments, but after compliments, I was unwell for many days, but now I am a little recovered, and after this, I have sent you a little kitoweo [i.e. something to be eaten with the rice or grain, which forms the bulk of all meals], and I beg your acceptance, they are seven fowls and compliments, and he who wrote this is H. son of A.

II. jenāb, il mohēb, il akram, in nasih, D. S., il Mwingrezi, insha' Allah salam aleik wa rēhmet Allah wa barakātahu; wa baada, nakuarifu hali zangu njema wa thama nawe kathālik ya afia, wa zayidi amana yako ulioniletia imefika kwangu, ahsanta, Mwenyezi Muungu atakujazi kheiri ukae ukitukumbuka, nasi nyoyo zetu zinaku-
To the honourable, the beloved, the noble, the sincere D. S., the Englishman, please God, peace be with you and the mercy of God and His blessing; and afterwards, I inform you that my health is good, and may you be the same as to health, and further, your pledge which you sent me has reached me, I thank you. Almighty God will satisfy you with good that you may continue to remember us, and as for us, our hearts think much of you; we wish you to come to the land of Zanzibar, you and the mistress, and let her come that we may behold her, and let her come that she may look upon the land of Zanzibar; and we every day when we sleep and when we wake pray for you to God that you come to the land of Zanzibar, that we may meet in health and strength, and we, we wish that our eyes should see you morning and evening, and if you come not yourself, forget us not by letters, we adjure you. Salute for me the mistress your wife with many compliments. And we are longing for you, and if we had been birds we would have come flying to see you once and then return. At home my wife sends many compliments. M. son of A. salutes you much, and he who wrote this is M. the son of S. 26 of the month Jemad al akhr.

II.

Kala es sha'iri. The Verse says.

Nimu ya Injili The doctrine of the Gospel—
Yuaijua habara He knows how its news
Pia yote kufasili. To explain,—all of it.

Ni muhebbi akhyara He is a choice friend,
Kwetu sisi aifthali. Especially in our house;
- Edi ni mtu wa kweli. He is a man of truth.
Rabbi, nipe tesira. O Lord, give me prosperity.

Hatukiati kisiwa kwa uvambume na upembe
Tukaifuasa hawa kulewalewa na ombe
Ni mpunga na maziwa na kull a siku ni ngombe
Twalalia kwa jivumbe, lipangine kwa rihani.

We shall not leave the island for tale-bearing and plotting,
And follow the fancy to be tossed on the sea.
Here are rice, and milk, and every day an ox;
We sleep among perfumes, and strings of sweet basil.

Swahili letters are always written with a string of Arabic compliments at the beginning, and Arabic words are freely introduced throughout. In letter-writing kuarifu is used for to inform, and kuwasilia (not kufikia) for to reach, as in the phrase your letter has reached me—waraka wako umeniasilia. Swahili verses are written in an obsolete dialect full of Arabic words and foreign words generally, called Kingozi. It has not yet been studied by any European. Among its more remarkable peculiarities is the use of a present perfect made by a change in the termination of the Verb, similar to those in use in the Yao and in other languages of the Interior. Thus a poet may write mbwene for nimeona, and nikomile for nimekoma. Some specimens of this dialect will be found in the poetry at the end of the "Swahili Tales."
Appendix III.

Part of a Swahili tale with the prefixes marked and explained. It is printed first as in the main it would be written by a native; next the compound forms are marked by hyphens and explained; and last comes an English translation.

Yule kijana akafuta upanga wake, akanena, mimi nitaingia humo i.

The tale, of which this is a part, is called the Hadithi ya Waridi, II. na Ureda, na Jindi, na Sinibar. The portion of it here printed begins with a verb in the ka tense, because it is carrying on a narration already commenced. The first words of the story are—Aliondokea mti tajiri. After this first verb in the li tense the rest are formed with ka, unless they are constructed with a relative or particle of time or place, which cannot be joined with ka but only with li.

Yule, that; demonstrative (p. 115) referring to a singular substantive of the first class, kijana being regarded as the name of a person. Ki-jana, a young man or woman, here a man. A-ka-futa, and he drew; a-, sign of third person sing., appropriate to a noun of the first class or to any word denoting a living being; -ka-, sign of the narrative past tense; -futa, draw. 194. You ought to love him very much.
Wastahili kumpenda sana.

195. Kuamba na kusengenya. To talk of a person behind his back, and secretly to make contemptuous signs about him when present. This phrase is often used as a test of a stranger's knowledge of Swahili; what it describes is counted as a special sin.

196. To ask a man his name.
Oh! Rafiki yangu nambie jina lako (Oh! my friend, tell me your name). Wajua, bwana we, tumeonana mimi nawe, jina lako ninelisahau, tasathal nambie jina lako (You know, sir, you and I have met [before], but I have forgotten your name, please to tell me your name).
When you have heard it, say—Inshallah, sitalisahau tena (Please God, I shall not forget it again).

197. A polite question and answer at leave-taking.
Unayo haja tena? (Have you any further desire?)
Haja yangu ya kuishi weve sana na furaha (My desire is that you may live long and happily).
APPENDIX V.

ON MONEY, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES IN ZANZIBAR.

The following account is based on scattered notices in the late Bishop Steere's collections, and on some tables furnished to the Rev. P. L. Jones-Bateman by a well-informed servant of the Mission in Zanzibar.

1. Money.

The only copper coin in common use in Zanzibar is the Anglo-Indian quarter-anna, or pice, in Swahili pesa, plur. pesa or mapesa; but the robo pesa, or quarter-pice (of which, however, three are equal to one pice), is also current.

The silver coins current are the Anglo-Indian rupee and, less commonly, the Austrian dollar. The eight-anna (half-rupee), four-anna (quarter-rupee), and two-anna pieces are also met with.

The relative values of these coins and their equivalent in English money fluctuate considerably. For practical purposes, it is sufficient to remember that an English sovereign may be generally exchanged for 12 rupees, English bank-notes, cheques, drafts, &c., being subject to a small discount; that an Austrian dollar is reckoned as equal to 2 rupees and 8 pice, and that a rupee is worth usually from 60 to 64 pice. It follows that, though accounts are usually kept in dollars and cents, and 5 dollars reckoned as equal to one pound English, it is more exact to consider—and so on.

In larger sums, the scale of legal tender is to reckon—

There is no exact standard or relationship of measures of length. Those in common use are merely taken from parts of the human body, viz.:

Wanda. plur. nyanda, a finger's breadth.
Shibiri, a span, the distance between the tips of the outstretched thumb and little finger.
Morita, a slightly shorter span, from the tip of the thumb to that of the fore-finger.
Thiraa or Mkono, a cubit, the distance from the finger-tips to the elbow joint. Of this again, there are two varieties:—
Thiraa hamili, or full cubit, as just described, and—
Thiraa honde, or fist cubit, from the elbow-joint to the knuckles.
Wari, or yard, is one half of the—
Pima, a man's height, or the distance he can stretch with his arms, a fathom. A doti is a measure of similar length.

The uayo, or length of the foot, Arab khatua, is also used occasionally, and the English foot, futi, regularly by Indian carpenters and in other trades. Approximately, the relations of these measures may be tabulated thus:—

1 wanda = 1 inch.
8 or 10 nyanda = 1 shibiri hamili = 1 quarter-yard.
2 shibiri = 1 thiraa or mkono = 1 cubit or half-yard.
2 thiraa = 1 wari = 1 yard
2 wari = 1 pima = 1 fathom.

Distance is loosely estimated by the average length of an hour's walking. Dunga, which lies almost exactly halfway across the island of Zanzibar, at a distance of perhaps twelve miles, is described as a walk of four hours, saa 'inne; and Kokotoni, at the north end of the island, distant perhaps twenty miles, from Zanzibar, as a walk of at least six hours, saa sita. On the mainland, a day's march is a common but vague measure of perhaps twenty miles.

For gold, silver, silk, scent, and other costly articles, the unit is the wakia, or weight of an Austrian silver dollar, almost exactly an ounce. For the names of fractional parts of any unit, see "Handbook," p. 93; but the weight of a pice is often used as a convenient though inexact measure of small quantities.

For heavy articles, the usual unit is a rátel, or rattli, equal to 16 wakia, and corresponding to one pound.

16 wakia = 1 rátel.
3 rátel = 1 mani.
6 rátel = 1 pishi.
6 pishi = 1 frasila, about 35 lbs. avoirdupois.
10 frasila = 1 mzo.

Hence, 6½ frasila or 6½ mizo may be regarded as = 1 ton.

No fixed liquid measure is used by the poorer classes. Shopkeepers sell their oil, treacle, &c., by tin-ladlefuls (kikombe), or by the bottle (chupa), or by the tin, i.e. the tins in which American oil is imported to Zanzibar (tanaki, tini, also debe).

Corn (nafaka) or dry measure is, of course, of great importance in a country where grain is the staple of food and chief article of commerce.

The smallest unit is the—

Kibaba, a measure of perhaps a pint.

Kibaba cha tele, if the measure is heaped up—the usual proceeding.

Kibaba cha mfuto, if cut off flat.

2 vibaba (vyu tele) = 1 kisaga.
2 visaga = 1 pishi, about half a gallon.

The pishi connects the measures of capacity and weight, and for some of the common dry commodities, such as chiroko and kundi, the pishi may be regarded as equivalent either in capacity to 4 vibaba, or in weight to 6 rattli.

Grain is sold wholesale by the kanda, or sack of grass-matting, or (if from India) by the gunia, a wide sack. The gunia often weighs about 168 lbs. The kanda varies, both with the kind of grain and the place from which it is imported. For instance, while at Kwale, Mago, and Mvita, towns on the Swahili coast, the kanda of rice at times contains 10, 11, or 12 pishi, and the kanda of Indian corn 10 pishi, at Pangani, Tanga, and Mtang’ata the kanda of rice will contain 15, 16, or 17 pishi, and the kanda of Indian corn 13 or 13½ pishi.

Various other terms are in use for different commodities, e.g. poles are sold by the korja, or score; stone for building by the boma, a heap which may weigh 4 cwt. to 5 cwt.; lime by the tanuu (clamp) or kikapo; calico by the jura, 35 yards; and various other things by the “mzigo” or load.
